Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail, are—from Bombay, October 14; Agra and Madras, October 12; Calcutta, October 11.

MR. CAMPBELL seems to have been once more displaying his usual incapacity for doing sensible things in a prudent way. He has suddenly burst out upon his astonished subjects with what seems an excellent plan for extending popular instruction in Bengal. His aim is to throw all primary teaching into the hands of the Municipalities, at whose disposal a sum of £40,000 in all will at once be placed in grants proportioned to the wants of each district. The magistrate of each district will see that the money assigned to it is properly laid out. In this way Mr. Campbell hopes to see six or seven thousand primary schools established in Bengal before the spring of 1874. By that time "considerable and prosperous villages" will be able, he thinks, to take charge of their own schools. In each district the present local committee will form the kernel of a school committee, under the presidency of the Commissioner, with the Magistrate-Collector as Vice-President. This committee will have a voice in the appointment of all schoolmasters drawing pay from Rs. 50 to Rs. 200 a-month. Masters in the lower village schools will be appointed by the Magistrate. In these last the schooling will be carried on in the prevailing vernacular of the several districts. Where Mohammedans preponderate, grants in aid, similar to those conferred on the common village schools, may be allotted to their muktabs, provided that useful primary teaching be imparted by them. When the system develops, concludes the Lieutenant-Governor, "when the rural Municipalities undertake schools with Government assistance, when the demand for and means of education increase, more money may be available, and we may attempt more schools. The object of the present grant is to make a beginning of mass education in the country, and the Lieutenant-Governor hopes to be assured that the money is well spent. He would rather have an assurance of this kind and demand for more money than be told that it has not been possible effectively to spend what is now given."

MR. CAMPBELL enjoins on all magistrates who may be concerned in enforcing this new system, the duty of cultivating the goodwill of the wealthier natives in their districts, whose sympathy and support may be worth enlisting on the side of Government. Unluckily the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal dispenses in his own case with the rules he lays down for others; and the result is that his new scheme is intensely unpopular at the very outset. Nobody trusts him in this matter, because he never deigned to consult any of the leading natives before translating his intentions into acts. Instead of avoiding all needless friction, he seems to take a perverse pleasure in raising new hindrances to his successful progress. The consequences are easy to imagine. In India at any rate we cannot do without the suaviter in modo.

LORD ULICK BROWNE seems bent on following in Mr. Campbell's steps. As Chairman of the Calcutta Justices, he has somehow managed grievously to offend not only the four justices who first annoyed him, but the greater part of Calcutta. The justices in question, one of whom is the well-known Babu, Rajendra Lala Mithra, have received an address from 2,500 leading ratepayers, assuring them of the general sympathy and support in the struggle with their indiscreet and high-handed Chairman. What the quarrel is about, we cannot clearly understand for the haze of words that seems to obscure it. One thing however is clear enough, that Lord Ulick Browne has got into a mess of his own provoking.

DURING his two days' halt at Jacobabad in the beginning of November, Lord Northbrook was to receive a visit from the penitent Khan of Khelat, whose concessions at the last moment have averted the long-threatened rupture of friendly relations between him and the Indian Government. The Khan was accompanied from Khelat by the Agent, Major Harrison. There seems little reason to doubt that, during his travels through Sind, the Viceroy will once more take up the question of uniting Sind to the Punjab, a question which has long called for an early settlement. Sind and the Punjab are geographically one, like the north-western and south-western States of the American Union, with the Indus for their Mississippi.

GENERAL DALY returned to Indore from Simla on the 27th September. The Governor of Bombay had been staying for a few days at Singarh near Poona, the ancient stronghold of the farfamed Marátha leader, Sivaji. The Maharajah of Travancore is going to devote the cold weather to a tour through Northern India. In the meantime Lord Hobart of Madras was still invisible behind the clouds at Utakamand, whence he is not expected at Madras before the second week of November. Talking of Madras, we are sorry to hear that no camp of exercise will after all be held at Bangalor.

WE note that Mr. J. S. Mackintosh has been appointed Assistant Secretary to the Government of the North-Western Provinces.

It has been officially announced that the Oudh and Rohilkund Railway will be opened for public traffic to Faizabad on the 15th November, to Bairam Ghat on the 1st November, and to Moradabad on the 15th October.

GOVERNMENT has sanctioned Rs. 20,000 for advances to the inhabitants of Khandesh who suffered by the late floods, and has besides issued orders for the supply of wood from the jungles for building purposes free of charge.

At a meeting of the Legislative Council on the 25th September, Sir John Strachey introduced a Bill to amend and define the laws for settling and collecting land-revenue in Oudh. The present Bill will decide all revenue questions on the principle of the Punjab Act XXIII. of 1871. Mr. Hobhouse presented the Report of the Committee on the Bill to amend the law of appeal to the Privy Council. The Bill as amended is to be sent home for the approval of the India Office and the Privy Council.

At a meeting of the Legislative Council, held at Simla on the 2nd October, the Punjab Opium Bill was introduced by Mr. Egerton, and referred to a Select Committee. Mr. Egerton also presented the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill concerning the appointment of Municipal Committees in the Punjab.

GOING into camp in the cold season in India is generally regarded as a very agreeable way of combining the regular duties of a collector or deputy commissioner with the pursuit of health and of such amusement as may come in the way. To judge however from the complaints lately published by the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, the duties of his subordinates on such occasions are not always so carefully discharged as they might be in comparison with the zeal displayed in other directions. From circumstances which have come to his knowledge, the Chief Commissioner "fears that deputy commissioners do not, when on their cold weather tours, employ their time and regulate their movements with a single eye to the real and proper object of such tours, viz., the making themselves thoroughly acquainted with every part of their districts, and obtaining, by free and personal communication with the people themselves, a full knowledge of all that is going on within the limits of their charge, and of the condition, wants, feelings, and wishes of the people, for whose good government and welfare they are responsible."

If the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung may be credited, the Russian Embassy to Yarkand in May last received a very different greeting from that bestowed on Mr. Shaw, or even on Mr. Forsyth. When Baron Kaulbars arrived at Kashgar, the Atalik-Ghazi begged him and his companions to sit wherever they pleased, "on my knees or my breast, for you are guests sent to me by Heaven." The Russians were allowed to go about in perfect freedom, and two merchants who had travelled with the Embassy got leave to make a journey for trading purposes to Yarkand and Khoten. Baron Kaulbars was gratified with a military review, in which the soldiers manœuvred to English words of command, and Yakub Beg assured his guests that he regarded them as intimate friends, or else he would not have treated them to such a display. A treaty of commerce was afterwards signed on the Saint's-day of the Grand Duke Constantine. On taking leave of their host, the Russians were assured in the friendliest terms of his Majesty's goodwill. He had "formerly sought the friendship of England, but now felt himself more attracted to his good and powerful neighbour the Tzar, with whom alone he desired to live in friendship." Not long afterwards the Atalik Ghazi's ambassador brought the Treaty with him, duly signed, to Tashkand, where Governor-General von Kaufmann received him with great solemnity. The Augsburg paper dwells on the advantages thence accruing to Russian over English trade, and asks what better could be expected "in a country where, in spite of its position as a great Asiatic power, so little is known of Asia, and people trouble themselves so little about it, that hardly three members can be found in its Parliament possessed of a competent knowledge of the affairs of Islamitic Asia?" We are wont to talk of Russian order and civilisation as a good thing for Turkestan. But how if Russian influence should succeed, as it has done before, in imposing deterrent duties on all goods brought thither from English markets? Will our mercantile classes talk of humanity and civilisation then?

THE story told by the Augsburg journalist is confirmed by the full and interesting account of Baron Kaulbars's mission, which appears in the last number of Ocean Highways, condensed from the Baron's own report to General Kaufmann. On his way to Kashgar from Fort Narinsky on the Russian frontier, he came at last to a long narrow pass winding between steep rocky mountains, whence he emerged into the well-cultivated plain surrounding Kashgar itself. On his first visit to the King of Yarkand, he saw "a man of middle stature with sharp features and particularly sparkling eyes, arrayed in a simple dress, with a white turban on his head," who proved to be the renowned Yákub Beg himself. The Russians thought little enough of his Tartar soldiery, but were surprised to hear the words of command given in English. This fact, so flattering at first sight to English vanity, was really due to the presence of Indian Sepoy deserters or refugees, who had been allowed to train the Atalik Ghazi's troops after their own fashion.

GENERAL SIR A. J. CUNYNGHAME, having lately travelled over a large part of Southern Russia to the borders of Persia and on the Caspian, has given in a letter to the Times the results of his enquiries, so far as they bear on military questions between Russia and England. There is no connection, he tells us, between the Russian armies in the Caucasus and those in Turkistan. Neither Tiflis nor Astrakan can be regarded, he thinks, as a base to the armies of Central Asia, inasmuch as "every Russian soldier and all supplies go by way of Orenburg." To move an army on Kabul from the Caucasus would "involve a serious diplomatic question with other nations." Even in the event of a war with England, it would be a perilous task for Russia to despatch an army from Central Asia over the Southern frontiers of Turkistan, a country almost two-thirds the size of British India. And she would never diminish her army in the Caucasus, to undertake the hazardous march from Tiflis to Kabul. Even if she were able, which she is not, to embark on the Caspian a force sufficient to invade India by way of Afghanistan, a Mohammedan rising, aided as it would doubtless be from the side of Erzerum and Kars, would almost certainly bar her chances of success. As for a march on India by any of the Himalayan passes, the General's knowledge of those passes leads him to scout the move as "simply impossible." With regard to India herself, he cannot deny the constant presence of danger from within, but in view of the rapid progress towards comfort and security which his own eyes have seen in the North of India, he looks on the extent of that danger as greatly overrated. He therefore justly concludes that we have no cause for dreading Russian progress in Central Asia, so far at least as India is concerned.

A RECENT number of the Indian Economist contains an interesting sketch by Colonel E. Money of the Indian tea-districts and their comparative advantages, with regard to the four great requisites of soil, climate, labour, and means of transport, besides certain minor questions involved in the ultimate choice of a site. The climate in the first place should be hot and damp, with a rainfall of eighty to a hundred inches a-year, pretty equally distributed through the twelve months. Drought in the early months is bad, and dry hot winds are still worse, nor is cold weather favourable to abundant crops. The climate in short cannot be too hot for tea, if it be also damp enough; but below the fifteenth or sixteenth degree of latitude the plant does not seem to thrive. In point of climate Assam, especially in the northern parts, is all that could be wished. The soil too is "decidedly rich," and the Brahmaputra furnishes an easy outlet for the tea grown in Assam. But in respect of labour this province stands lowest on the scale; the Assamese being few and lazy, and the distance from the seaboard adding greatly to the cost of imported labour. In Cachar on the other hand the rains are rather too heavy, but more rain falls there in the spring than in the best parts of Assam. Its soil is sandier and weaker than that of Assam, and it has fewer breadths of level ground. Cachar being nearer Calcutta and equally rich in water-ways with Assam, pays less than its neighbour for the imported coolies on whom it mainly depends. Third in the list comes Chittagong, with a lighter but worse distributed rainfall than Cachar, and a soil less uniformly good. In the hill tracts the spring rains are heavier and the soil richer than in other parts of the province. With regard to labour and means of transport Chittagong takes the first place in all India. Except for about two months in the rice-season labour is plentiful, and ships from England can sail direct into a convenient harbour on the coast. Here too there is plenty of good manure. Of the Terai or belt of jungle below Darjiling, Colonel Money thinks most favourably from what he has heard about it. The climate there seems nearly equal to Cachar, while the soil is better. Labour is also cheaper there than in Assam or Cachar, and the means of transport will be much improved whenever a railroad is made to the foot of the Darjiling Hills. The Dehra Dhoon on the contrary—the well-wooded valley below the Mussoorie range, where the first tea plantation in India was started—has far too dry a climate in the spring and hot weather. Shrivelled up by the hot winds, the tea plant cannot thrive here as it ought. Labour indeed is cheap and plentiful, but the cost of transport so far inland is very great.

THE charming valley of Kangra with its “charming climate” is not, in Colonel Money’s eyes, “the place for a man who wants to make money by tea,” however desirable for a settler of contented mind. From a height of about 3,000 feet above the sea, it slopes so gently that it may almost be called level; an advantage rare among Himalayan tea-gardens, and sometimes wanting even in Assam and Chittagong. The soil is richer than that of the Dhoon, and local labour can be had cheap. The air however is too dry and cold, and the cost of carriage to the sea-coast is necessarily great. Land moreover is not easy to procure. It is rather in the local markets of the Punjab and among the wild tribes across the border, that Kangra tea will find the readiest sale. Its delicate flavour, we think, should commend it to all judges of good tea; but at present the chief use of Indian teas in the home markets is to flavour the “washy stuff from China;” and for that purpose Assam tea is probably the best. Kemaon is another hill district in which tea, according to the Colonel, can never be grown at a profit. It may be “a charming climate to live in, with magnificent scenery to gaze at;” but the sight of “that glorious panorama the Snowy Range” is a poor set off for tea-gardens that won’t pay. Colonel Money himself found out in time, like many others, the uselessness of trying to grow tea for trading purposes in a climate far too cold, dry, and bracing for that end; to say nothing of the cost of carriage over the hills and plains even to the nearest railway. Labour indeed is cheap and plentiful in Kemaon, and the district is blest with a rich soil, in places the richest that Colonel Money ever saw. But a climate where potatoes grow to perfection is unsuited to tea. Something might be done with the lower valleys in the outer ranges, where the frost does not linger so long as further inwards; but here again the soil is less rich, and the cost of carriage would not be much diminished. The same objections apply to the neighbouring district of Garhwal, where with one exception the soil is not so good as in Kemaon.

SPEAKING from hearsay of Darjiling, Colonel Money finds that the tea-gardens on the outer and lower slopes are doing well—for hill gardens. They have a better chance of paying than those of Kemaon, but can never pay so well as those in the Terai below them, to which we have already referred. In Hazáribágh, again, labour is remarkably cheap, and the soil light and friable. But the climate is too dry; the plants suffer from the hot winds which blow there—not indeed for long; and the tea must be carried some distance to the nearest railway. The Nilgiri Hills have a climate better suited to tea than the Himalayas, but the summer there is hardly hot enough, and an equable and temperate climate may do well enough for cinchona, but will hardly serve for tea, which seems never to thrive so near the equator. The soil however is good, and not much difficulty exists in the way of transport.

WE have to notice with regret the death of Sir Daniel Elliott, formerly a distinguished member of the Madras Civil Service, which he entered in 1825. After filling some of the chief posts in the Madras Presidency, he became a member of the Viceroy’s Legislative Council under Lord Canning. In 1858 he retired on his annuity, and some years afterwards his past services were rewarded with a knighthood of the Star of India. Erelong however his health gave way altogether, and he lingered in a paralysed state till last Wednesday.

ALLEN’S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, November 4, 1872.

THE WILD TRIBES OF THE EASTERN SATPURAS.

It may be considered a hopeful sign of the times, when papers on Indian subjects find their way into serials at once so readable and widely read as the Cornhill Magazine. Such appearances indeed may still be infrequent; but they serve to whet the curiosity of the home public with regard to matters in which, for India’s sake, it ought to take more interest than it generally does. One of these papers published in the November number of the Cornhill, deals in a pleasantly instructive way with the manners and customs of the Gonds and Bygas of the Eastern Satpuras, among whom the writer spent the cold season of three or four successive years. These aboriginal races dwell in the hills and valleys along either side of the Nerbadda near its source. For sixty miles westward from the Ammarkantak plateau stretches a chain of valleys, intersected by spurs from the main ranges of the Satpura Hills, and watered by many streams which meander from the forest-clad hill-sides down through grassy prairies relieved here and there with belts of sal jungle and patches of cultivation. The dwellings of the Bygas are perched high on the hills in sheltered nooks and corners, while the Gonds prefer the valleys, where their rough wattle-huts plastered with mud may be seen surrounded by patches of maize and fields of millet.

Both races are alike in the obscure antiquity of their origin; nor does the writer help us to distinguish clearly between them in respect of ethnical peculiarities. The claim of the Bygas to some kind of superiority seems to be acknowledged in the presence in every Gond village of at least one Byga, whose services are in great request for the settlement of all disputes regarding the boundaries of forests and wastes. In point of numbers the Byga has the advantage by about ten to one. In the eastern hills he is seen at his best as a specimen of manhood, low of stature, but manly and not ill-looking, with a longish head, somewhat aquiline features, remarkably small hands, and with “hair and features almost anti-Mongolian.” Further westward the men are barely four feet high, have dark skins, “roundish heads, distended nostrils, wide mouths, thick lips, straight, unkempt black hair, scanty beard and moustache, and hair and features decidedly Mongolian.” Now and then you may come upon a woolly crop like the negroe’s, growing upon a flat head. One tribe shaves all the head except one lock, while another wears the hair uncut, tied up in a knot behind. In their native wilds the Bygas are “fearless, independent, honest, and trustworthy,” speaking their minds freely before the white man, and conspicuous by their absence from our police-courts. This latter trait may be partly owing, we fancy, to the working of those self-elected courts of Byga elders which are described as hearing all cases of conjugal delinquency, and awarding damages for the not infrequent abstraction of another man's wife. In these cases the offender generally has to find the injured husband another wife, or else to pay him the costs of a second wedding.

The Eastern Bygas are a simple folk, with few wants, no luxuries, and extreme ignorance of the value of money, of which indeed they make very little use, bartering gums and other forest products for what little cloth, wool, or tobacco they may need. Their own hills supply them with the iron out of which they forge their own axeheads and sickles. The millet, their chief crop, they raise by the wasteful method—so common among Indian hill-tribes—of burning the jungle and sowing seed among the ashes. When that resource fails them, they fall back on roots and berries and on the game they may chance to kill with their bows and arrows. With these simple weapons their expertness is wonderful. Their keen eyesight enables them to follow the track of a wounded animal over the hardest ground, and their great perseverance usually brings the prey into their hands. Not less remarkable is their skill in wielding the axe, a skill which comes to them almost by instinct from their earliest years. "Give a child an axe as soon as he can crawl," they often say, "and the first thing he does is to hack at a tree." In clearing away the forest, they will leave a single tree standing here and there, which becomes an object of the deepest veneration, as the home of some wood-spirit to be propitiated with offerings of food, clothes, or flowers.

For them indeed the forests, rivers, and hills teem with spirits, good and evil, whose local habitations are held sacred on that account. With them nature-worship seems always to take a spiritual form, whether the object of reverence be the sun, the earth, or the spirits of cholera and small-pox. Like the Chinese, they worship their dead forefathers. When the house-father dies, his spirit is supposed to dwell among the surviving inmates and watch over them. His ashes are hung up in a piece of cloth to the rafters; food is daily set apart for him, and his manes are invoked on all important occasions. After a certain time the dead man is supposed to have entered the spirit-circle of his ancestors, who still benevolently haunt their old homes.

One of the Byga practices strongly resembles the scape-goat offerings of the Hebrews and a similar custom in Southern India, as described in Mr. Gover's "Folk-Songs." When cholera is rife, the people collect a number of fowls, and form in procession; the head priest draws a straw from every house-thatch, and burns the bundle at a shrine outside the village, with a little rice, turmeric, and butter. The fowls are then "smeared with vermillion and driven out into the smoke and darkness as scapegoats;" the spirit of the disease being supposed to go out with them and transfer his attentions to the place whither they happen to wander. For this purpose pigs are found to be an even surer medium than fowls, and sometimes goats are substituted for either. Fowls, and sometimes pigs are also sacrificed to the spirit of cholera; the flesh being eaten by the priests and devotees, while for the spirit itself is reserved the blood, as the essence of the thing sacrificed.

The Bygas are all polygamists, the number of their wives varying from two or three to seven, according to their means. Marrying costs little beyond the first expenses, for "the women are all good labourers, and more than pay for their keep." If a girl declines to wed the object of her parents' choice, she takes matters into her own hands, like some of her more civilised sisters; meets her lover, tells him of her resolve, anoints his head with turmeric, and touches his feet. He then takes her home to marry her thence, if his parents will pay the expenses. If not, he places a pair of bangles on her arms, gives a dinner to the elders of the village, and takes the girl to his own home. Sometimes a poor youth wins his bride by binding himself to serve her father for a term varying from eight months to five years. On the day of a marriage the Byga priest leads bride and bridegroom by the hand thrice round the house, touches their heads with oil and turmeric, and places the bride on the back of her brother-in-law, if she have one; the bridegroom following close behind. The ceremony ends with the tying together the clothes of the wedded pair, after which the friends make merry together, until most of them are exceedingly drunk.

INDIAN FINANCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—When the Indian Budget was brought forward in the House of Commons on the 6th August last, the public were at a loss what to believe between the rose-coloured picture presented to them by Mr. Grant Duff, and the gloomy prospect unveiled by Mr. Fawcett. The London papers at first thought both statements exaggerated, but have been more decisive in their views since learning the opinions entertained on the subject by the press in India; and the Times, in a carefully written article in the early part of this month, endorsed the opinion expressed in its Calcutta correspondent's letter, to the effect that we shall certainly be drifting into serious financial difficulties unless Mr. Fawcett's advice, rather than that of Mr. Grant Duff, be adopted.

The member for Brighton, it will be remembered, after showing that the revenue derivable from our Eastern Empire was essentially inelastic, while its expenditure had been increasing at a frightful rate; and after exposing some of the numerous instances of waste and extravagance which had characterised the administration of its finances, insisted on rigid economy for the future, and reminded his hearers of those memorable words of Lord Mayo which described so forcibly the political danger which had already arisen from the greatly increased taxation of late years.

If increase of taxation, said Mr. Fawcett, has already produced so much mischief, what is the outlook for the future? A slowly increasing revenue, a rapidly increasing expenditure, administration each year becoming more costly, a determination to embark on a vast and indefinite expenditure on public works, with the ominous fact constantly staring us in the face that, to use Mr. Massey's words, we have used up every source of revenue and forced up every tax to a maximum. Unless we are prepared to enter upon a course of wanton recklessness, which will lead to financial ruin, should not the considerations which have been just mentioned arouse the attention and excite the misgivings of everyone who feels the slightest concern for the future of our great dependency?

Indian subjects hitherto have excited little interest in England; but looking at the very large amount of Indian Securities (about 200 millions sterling) which is now held at home, any disaster which might happen to our Eastern Empire would be very widely felt at home. It behoves therefore those who are personally interested in the safety of our Indian possessions no longer to stand aloof, but to make themselves acquainted with the actual state of things in the East, in order to bring the pressure of public opinion on the administration of India and induce reform where reform is needed.

Mr. Fawcett's speech, as the Times of 7th August observed, teems with facts; and, as these facts relate to questions which will, ere long, be forced on the attention of the public, a careful perusal of the speech would greatly assist in comprehending and following the discussions which must soon arise. Let us only hope that the reform, so urgently needed, will not be anticipated and retarded by any disaster or untoward event in India.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In one of your late issues (Sept. 17) you say that the officers of the old Bengal, Madras, and Bombay Engineers complain that their brethren of the "big guns" have had the opportunity of retiring on handsome pensions, and that, contrary to all precedent, they have not been given a similar inducement to retire. Then you go on to say that it was to compensate the Artillery because they have been superseded by the Engineers. This really is not the case, as the officers of the Artillery and Engineers of the same date from Addiscombe will be seen to have been promoted very equally throughout the services. Lately, however, the Madras Engineers have had a run, by three officers with off-reckonings dying in a little over twelve months; but still the junior lieutenant-colonels and senior captains are men of long service.

The officers of the Indian Artillery who actually did retire were not so very unlucky, but they were senior to the officers of the Royal Artillery; this was the reason why H.R.H. was anxious to get rid of them, whereas the old and Indian Royal Engineers cannot interfere with one another, hence the reason why the India Office has not been induced to do a generous action. Yet I cannot but believe that it will come, and that the Indian Engineers will receive the same boon as the R.A.'s. Whenever heretofore any boon has been given to the Artillery, the same thing has been given to the Engineers.

It must be recollected how hardly, with regard to pension, the officers of the Ordnance Corps have been treated in comparison with the Staff Corps. A Staff Corps officer gets £1,150 a-year after thirty-eight years' service, including eight years' furlough; whilst an officer of the R.A. or R.E. gets only £750 a-year after thirty-eight years' service, and only six years' furlough. On examining the Army List, I see that in the Bengal Engineers the senior officer without off-reckonings is Rigby, of the year 1829; in Madras, Walker, 1842; and in Bombay, Tremehere, 1829; which would show the promotion is not so very rapid (except in Madras), and if they belonged to the Staff Corps they would have got off-reckonings five years ago.

VILLAGE SCHOOLS IN THE CENTRAL PROVINCES.

The Times of India holds that in the eyes of men who care for the country they aid in governing no subject would be more abundantly interesting or better calculated to bring home to them the vaunted blessings of the British rule than that of the Indian village school—provided that such men can bring themselves to have faith in the educational department. But it is not too much to say that many district officers, men of many years' experience, and who have the welfare and advancement of the country at heart, cannot bring themselves to believe that the educational system is sound to the core. They will tell us that the labours of inspectors and the efforts of schoolmasters are most praiseworthy; that outwardly and visibly schools flourish; that the statistics, as compared with those of former years, show a satisfactory increase in the number of children attending them. And while they mete out to the department, as a department, its well earned measure of praise, they must needs confess that the educational coin has not the true ring after all. They will even go further and tell us that their intimate knowledge of the modes of thought and the habits of the people they rule over has taught them this, that the educational movement, with some marked exceptions, is universally unpopular amongst the poorer classes, and that the system has an unfortunate tendency to foster shams. Education, like every other good gift given to mankind, must expect to meet with opposition; but more than this, the people cry out, with reason, that they are too poor to learn—that they want their children's time to make what money they can of it—and that they cannot tell what good is likely to come to them because of their being able to read and write. And it is no exaggeration to say that, at least in the Central Provinces, education and sanitation are much upon the same level in the estimation of a great proportion of the people. Just as upon the expected advent of any official at a hamlet it is swept and garnished, and purged of the accumulated filth of a twelvemonth, only to relapse into a similar condition of dirt immediately upon the official's departure, so in like manner are the schools too often considered merely as one of the show places of the village, to be filled with extemporised scholars caught from the highways and hedges to please the inspecting or other officer, and suffered to remain almost empty and quite unregarded at all other times. Go from village school to village school, and the result is ever the same—a large imaginary, and a very small real attendance, parents setting their faces resolutely against general attendance, though on parade days it is insisted on; schoolmasters railing against Municipal committee men and malgoozars for not filling the school; malgoozars, driven to their wit's end, forcibly laying hands on a couple of dozen of reluctant urchins whose names have been on the school books, but whose feet may never have trodden the school-floor for months and years. It is grotesquely painful to see the poor little half-starved, half-naked wretches who have never known the advantage of a full meal, dragged away from the poor occupations which might in some sort help to fill their famished maws, to swell the triumph of a school inspector, who on his side will probably affect to ignore the whole progress of school filling, and will fill many pages of vague nonsense about the excellence of the school, the virtues of the master, and the able assistance rendered by the village magnates—these last all the while chuckling at having got together so many boys on so short a notice, and wondering whether there will be many complaints from the long-suffering parents when the show is over. It is impossible to say that this is a too realistic picture of the village school system in many parts of India; and it is precisely this sort of sham that is most obnoxious to the souls of honest district officers, who are very jealous for the honour of the administration they represent. They cannot fail to perceive that the costly machinery of the Educational Department is in many provinces entirely unproductive, that its time has not yet come, and that to force it where it is not wanted is simply to propagate the theory and practice of shams.

THE MADRAS ARMY.

The Madras Times observes that the indictment against the Madras army usually drawn up by Bengal officers contains three points, viz., that it is too large for the wants of the Presidency, that it is very expensive, and that it is less efficient than the other native armies. To each of these counts a very good answer can be given. The Madras army, it is admitted, is too large for mere garrison purposes. The Commander-in-Chief would, no doubt, undertake to hold Southern India with a much smaller force; but that is not the question. The Madras army is, to a large extent, an army of reserve. It is the army which supplies garrisons to Burmah, and, until lately, it garrisoned Singapore and Hong Kong; and it is the only Indian army that can be depended on to go by sea to support the Queen's authority when foreign difficulties occur. If a war were to break out in Burmah to-morrow, or troops were to be urgently required in China, it is the Madras army that would be required to furnish them. The Bengal troops, it is well known, surround their services with conditions about remaining in their own country that reduce them to the position of a militia rather than an army. They cannot be sent where the Government requires their services, if their going would interfere in any way with their caste prejudices. The Madras army will go anywhere, and on this account it forms an army of reserve for service beyond seas, and therefore is, and ought to be, maintained at a strength beyond the requirements of the Presidency for garrison purposes. There is another sense in which it is an army of reserve that is less pleasant to speak about, but that is not less true. It is a body of proved loyalty, while the armies of the north are composed of men whose loyalty may possibly break down under temptation, as it broke before, and it is not too much to say that English domination in India may some day depend upon the strength of the loyal coast army. It is not so long since the existence of a strong cordon of loyal Madras troops in the Central Provinces prevented an outbreak in the Nizam's country, and the consequent extension of the Bengal Mutiny all over India. And yet our financial wisacres incline to withdraw those loyal troops, and replace them with troops of the class that mutinied, because it will be rather cheaper to send stores from Allahabad than from Madras! The answer to the complaint about the expensiveness of the Madras army is closely allied to the arguments given above. If the Madras sepoy is more expensive, he is more trustworthy than his Bengal brother. The loyalty of the Madras sepoy is based upon various qualities and circumstances. In the first place, he is a more peaceably disposed man than the Sikh, and far less liable to fall into the hands of turbulent intriguers. Then, his family has lived under British rule for many generations, and loyalty towards it is an hereditary sentiment. Last, but not least, he is given to matrimony, and he thereby gives hostages to fortune that form the best possible guarantee of his fidelity. It is this peculiarity of the Madras army that makes it so expensive; but those best able to form an opinion hold that the guarantee of fidelity supplied by this organisation is well worth the money. As for the statement that the Madras army is less efficient than the other armies, it is at present a mere opinion, which we are inclined to meet with a simple negative. The Madras sepoy is not physically the equal of the Sikh or Rajpoot, we suppose; but his fidelity ought to make up for more inferiority in this respect than we are willing to admit. The fighting powers of troops is but a doubtful advantage so long as there is any reason to fear that they may fight on the wrong side. The military observers who are coming from Bengal to Bangalore will, as perhaps it is intended that they should, see the Madras troops at their worst; but we shall have a right to protest against those troops being judged by the same standard as troops in the north who have enjoyed many more military advantages; and we shall have a right to protest against governmental action prejudicial to the interests of that army based upon any report that does not give due weight to its proved fidelity.

REWARDS FOR THE LOSHAH CAMPAIGN.

The Englishman holds that the campaign was a Commissariat and Quarter-master General's campaign. The officers of the latter department have received brevets; but those of the former have been hardly treated. Major Mackenzie, who will be a Lieutenant-Colonel substantively, has received now that rank by brevet,—a reward which is paltry enough, while the name of Lieutenant-Colonel Davidson is not even mentioned. Its absence is inexplicable, except upon the ground of oversight. We hope that is the true explanation, and that the omission will shortly be rectified. When there is hard fighting, we can quite understand that the fighting man forgets how much he is dependent upon the man of arrangement and forethought, and what is due to him. But in the Loshai campaign there is no excuse for this sort of feeling, or for the feeling of jealousy of honours to those who are not exposed so much as themselves to danger from the enemy; for speaking broadly, there was no human enemy. the only real enemy was nature, and to this every member of the force was equally exposed. There is therefore not even a conventional reason for withholding rewards from a department which only too often receives less than its dues. There is another officer whose name has, throughout the acknowledgments of services rendered in the Loshai expedition, been treated with a neglect which, considering the position he held, can only be construed as an expression of the Government's disapprobation. We mean General Nuthall. We have seen a good deal of correspondence connected with the part taken by that officer in the expedition, and we are in a position to give a fair and unbiassed opinion on the matter. That opinion is neither favourable to the Government nor to the Commander-in-Chief. Lord Napier appears to have decided from the first against General Nuthall, and to have retained his opinion in spite of explanations and statements which would have been satisfactory and convincing to most men; while of the Government we need say nothing more than that, in reply to a careful and temperate vindication of his conduct by an officer of thirty-five years' service, the answer was, that "His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council deems it inexpedient to pursue the matter."

THE MAYNE MEMORIAL.—The Indian Church Gazette says—We regret that the Mayne Memorial should take the shape of a building for the Allahabad Girls' School. This seems to us, says that journal, a most unfortunate selection, as nearly all the objections in the way of native co-operation which lie against the Cannington School are removed by the fact that the girls' school, while it is not half so urgently required. Meanwhile, some of Mr. Mayne's private friends are going to place a stained-glass window in the Nynee-Tal Church opposite to that which he was instrumental in erecting to the memory of his friend Cuthbert Thornhill.

AN UNHEALTHY SHIP.—The pilot who brought up the British ship Western Star last Friday evening gave certain information to the police which caused them to go on board in order to ascertain the truth of it. On inquiry they learnt that the vessel had left Jeddah with upwards of 300 pilgrims, and that out of this number upwards of thirty had died on the passage; one had died that very day, and another who was at first believed to be dead, had been conveyed to the Medical College Hospital more dead than alive. The rest of the pilgrims are reported to be in a very weak and emaciated condition. The officer, Inspector Croft, who went on board, informed the coroner, while soliciting an inquest, that the stench on board was enough to sicken one, and the vessel was in a very filthy state; any one could smell the stench half a mile away. In his opinion it would be necessary to remove the vessel from its present moorings to some part of the river far away from the shipping. The Coroner at once summoned a jury, and later in the day viewed the body of the deceased at the dead-house of the Medical College Hospital. The inquest will be held this week.—Indian Daily News, Oct. 1.

ROAD STEAMERS.—An exceedingly compact little steam carriage for running at a high rate of speed on ordinary roads has lately arrived at Agra for his Highness the Maharajah of Jeypore. It runs on ordinary carriage wheels, is fitted with a neat little cased boiler and brass funnel, water tank with self-feeding injection pipes, distance indicator, break and guiding levers; it has a cushioned seat in front and a seat at the back for the fireman, with movable awnings at both ends; the whole weight of the carriage engine, tank, and boiler, when filled, does not exceed a ton, the expenditure of fuel is very small,—a few seers of coal being sufficient to keep up steam for a very long distance. On Thursday morning last, when the carriage arrived at Agra, after being unloaded from the railway truck, it was pushed across the pontoon bridge by coolies, and as soon as it was safely landed on the other side, steam was at once got up, and, amidst the enthusiastic shouts of the astonished natives, the new steam gharry started off along the Strand-road, keeping up a shrill whistle, almost as shrill as that made by the railway engines. At the first sound of the whistle a loud roar of delight issued from the crowd of natives, and all along the road the little carriage received a welcome ovation, the most phlegmatic of Oriental shopkeepers for once in their life throwing off their apathy and dancing with delight and wonder at the novel sight which met their astonished gaze. As soon as the carriage was well clear of the city end, out of the way of the dense traffic in the streets, speed was increased, and on the clear road under the walls of the fort the speed attained was fourteen miles per hour. The sentry on guard at the ramparts could scarcely believe his eyes as he saw the novel conveyance fly past him, or his ears, at the sound of the steam whistle reverberating and echoing under the walls of the fort. The steam road-carriages, with omnibuses attached, which are to run between Agra and Muttra are daily expected, and steam road-carriages will soon be no longer novelties; but at present the little pioneer in road steaming is attracting much attention, and is decidedly the lion of the day.—Bombay Gazette, Oct. 14.

STATION TALK.

SRINUGGER, Sept. 21.—The Mussulmans, who form about nine-tenths of the population of the Cashmere valley, are divided into the two great sects of Soonies and Sheeas. The Soonies are firm believers in Omar, and deadly enemies of their co-religionists, the Sheeas, to whom they give the opprobrious name of Rafizi, or heretic. The Soonies are about nine to one of the Sheeas. The Sheeas are firm believers in Ali and his house. They believe that he was superior even to Mahomed himself; they form a mere handful of the population in Cashmere. Their whole numbers throughout the valley are said not to exceed ten thousand. The Sheeas in Srinugger form about one thousand houses, or about six thousand souls, including men, women, and children. The Sheeas men form the most active, industrious and well-to-do portion of the Mussulmans. The finest papier mache workers and shawl makers are Sheeas. Perhaps the wealthiest man in Cashmere is Mirza Muhammad Ali, who is a Sheea. Well, there is a deadly hatred existing between these two great divisions of the Mahomedans, which sometimes manifests itself, as on the present occasion, in open warfare and a defiance of all law. Near the Hurree Purbut Hill in Srinugger, on which stands the fort commanding the city, is a musjid belonging to the Soonies, and called after a Mussulman worthy of the name of Madeen Sahib. Some time ago the Sheeas bought a small piece of ground opposite to this musjid, where they began to build a rough place of worship for themselves. The Soonies, as was natural, strongly objected to this arrangement, and begged the Sheeas to desist, which, however, the latter refused to do, and the place was built, but in a very rude fashion. Last Sunday, September 15, was the anniversary of Madeen Sahib's death, and there was great crowding of the Soonies to his musjid. The Soonies, being numerous and strong, and enraged at the obtrusive and pertinacious opposition of the Sheeas, as exemplified in their place of worship, set upon it, and soon made it a heap of ruins. The Sheeas then mustered themselves in large numbers, and a regular fight ensued on Sunday night, which raged on till Monday morning, when the Sheeas were completely beaten off the field. Then began the work of plunder, devastation and murder. The Soonies entered the defenceless houses of the Sheeas, and having plundered them, set them on fire. As the houses of Srinugger are built chiefly of wood, the work of destruction was of easy accomplishment. The houses of the Sheeas in the city were soon smouldering heaps of ruins. The destruction of their homes and property, which was basely carried off by the Soonies, was not the heaviest calamity that befell the Sheeas. Their women were dishonoured, and their children butchered before their very eyes. It was not till nine o'clock on Monday morning that any effort was made by the local authorities to put a stop to the tragedy. At that hour the Wuzer or chief native official of Cashmere, in the absence of Maharajah Rhumbeer Singh, appeared on the scene, accompanied with a large body of troops, who are said to have made a very feeble and abortive effort to quell the disturbance. At any rate, throughout the whole of Monday, Sept. 16, the work of destruction went on, and flames and smoke might have been seen ascending from Zudabal, Hassanabad, Babapoor, Drogajun, Gupakur, Sonawar, Pandrettun and other places. The authorities seemed altogether powerless. A very small band of resolute troops well led would have sufficed to quell the tumult; but they were not to be had, and the flames spread from village to village around Srinugger. The Sheeas fled in every direction, some seeking safety on the adjacent mountains, while others remained in the city in secret lurking places. Many of the women and children of the Sheeas found an asylum in the houses of the Hindoo portion of the community. The Hindoos in Cashmere are called Pundits, and number but between three and four thousand houses in the whole valley. They are in great trepidation lest the Soonies should set on them next for their kind hospitality to the houseless families of the Sheeas. The infuriated mob is still at its diabolical work. Monday night was spent sleeplessly by the inhabitants of Srinugger; Tuesday saw the Maharajah's sepoy busy at their work of apprehension and plunder. The leading Soonies were seized and imprisoned, besides hundreds of small fry.

CASHMERE, Sept. 28.—Some time ago I sent you a few notes on the terrible disturbance which happened in Srinugger on the 15th, 16th, and 17th inst., between the two great sects of Mussulmans—the Soonies and the Sheeas. The account formerly sent to you was substantially correct; all the women of the Sheeas were not dishonoured before the eyes of their male relations, but some were; nor were all the children of the Sheeas killed, but some were. Ever since the disturbance there has been more or less of a suspension of work and business in the city. The poor Sheeas are without houses, clothing, and food in very many cases. Fourteen hundred houses in Srinugger alone have been made uninhabitable by fire. It is a sad sight to see a solitary Sheea walking among the ruins of his lately comfortable home. From personal knowledge I can testify great hostility still exists in the minds of the Sheeas towards the Sunnies. The former are waiting anxiously to see what his Highness the Maharajah will do for them. I should not be surprised to see the Sheeas en masse emigrate to the Punjab; indeed, they talk of doing so, but are waiting for a little. In that case Cashmere would sustain proportionally as much loss and injury as France did when the Huguenots were compelled to seek a home in England. An influential Sheea is reported to have given the British resident a full account of the sufferings and losses sustained by his co-religionists. It is to be hoped that the English resident will officially bring the whole matter to the notice of his Government. No doubt many of the Sheeas are very guilty and altogether worthy of the terrible punishment that has befallen them. But all the Sheeas who have suffered so severely certainly were not to be blamed for the events of the 15th, 16th, and 17th of September. Then, on the other hand, many of the Sunnies who were not at all engaged in the disturbance are said to be implicated with their guilty fellows. Some of the stolen property of the Sheeas has been recovered. The recovered property consists of household furniture, clothes, pashmina, and such like things. But nothing has as yet been heard of the hard cash, jewels, and such like. Many of both sects blame the native authorities for not sooner sending troops to protect the innocent. The mob apparently was allowed to do what it liked. It is reported in Srinaggur that Dewan Kirpa Ram has arrived from Jumoo by orders of the Maharajah to investigate into everything bearing upon this disgraceful disturbance of the public peace. Dewan Kirpa Ram is the son of the able counselor of his Highness the Maharajah Dewan Jowala Sahai. The son formerly ruled over Cashmere, where he is said to have amassed great wealth, like his father. He is a man of considerable ability, although it is to be regretted that he is very unpopular in the valley. Srinaggur, like other cities, is divided into a number of districts, and over each of these districts a small magistrate is placed. Till now these officials have been Soonic Mussulmans. It is reported in the city that the Mussulman mohalladars have been deposed, and Cashmere pundits, who are Hindoos, appointed in their place—also muckadums, or chief men of the villages, who up till now have been Mussulmans, are to be superseded by Hindoo pundits. The Kismet of the poor Mussulman Cashmerie is very bad, for his chains are being tightened more and more. In this case he undoubtedly deserves punishment. I hope it will really be the aim of the native authorities to detect the guilty parties belonging both to the Sunnies and the Sheeas, to punish them and fully to indemnify the innocent sufferers of both sects for loss of property, health, and time.—Pioneer Correspondent.

MARWAR, Oct. 3.—Following the disasters, the result of the late floods, the locusts have paid us a visit, and in their passage have proved to the agriculturist a great scourge, having destroyed, I may safely say, at least one-third of the crop, and in some instances, rather than all should be lost, crops have been cut and taken in perfectly green. Nearly all the breaches made in the different tanks during the late heavy rains have been put in order. The destruction to property during the rain was great, I understand; something like two thousand houses fell, but fortunately with small loss of life. Everywhere after the rain the crops looked most promising, but the visit of the locusts has given quite another feature to the state of things. A few days ago his highness the Maharajah left Jodhpore, on the 29th ult., for Mount Aboo, reaching Rohit on the 30th ultimo, Pallee on the 1st, leaving Pallee yesterday, would reach Rimpura to-day, and will probably arrive at Mount Aboo to-morrow night. The nature of his business is kept a profound secret, but no doubt the consultation of the Agent Governor-General is sought for in reference to the late conduct of his son Jorawur Singh. It is also rumoured that certain State affairs will be entrusted to the heir-apparent, Jeswant Singh, who is now in Jodhpore, the Maharajah being preceded in his Aboo trip by two brothers of Jeswant Singh, viz., Kishore Singh and Purtab Singh, the two most promising out of the large number of his Highness's sons. Everywhere on his journey his Highness has been well received, and if outward show goes for anything, he seems popular amongst his subjects, and with all his faults he will be missed by many when he vacates the gaddie. He is warm-hearted and kind, but without the least self-will; hence the many blunders he commits by being ill-advised. Of course apart from that he is a perfect picture in life of the Marwarie. It is to be hoped for his country's sake some good may result out of his visit to Aboo, and were he guided by the advice of Colonel Brooke and Major Impey, Marwar would, so far as the country is concerned, soon have a different appearance; but to change the character and habits of the Marwarie would be as difficult a task as to make a cockney out of a Chinaman. The damages done to the Agra and Ahmedabad Trunk-road are rapidly being repaired by the energetic contractor at Pallee, who has yet before him a very large amount of work to perform in the Rajpootana division. Colonel Furlong, superintending engineer, leaves Aboo for his new appointment in Oudh. He is succeeded in Rajpootana by a Mr. Cromlin, who is highly spoken of. The weather is beginning to feel remarkably cool, night and mornings, and blankets are now indispensable to those who have the good luck to have them. More anon.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

RATHER SURPRISING.—The Indian Observer, in noticing the fact that his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab will next year go to Murree instead of Simla, writes:—"The official announcement has taken all the subordinate officials, and it is said even the Lieutenant-Governor, by surprise."

MARWAR.—Zorawor Singh's rebellion in Marwar may now be said to have been extinguished even to the embers. Khatoo has been taken, though the Thakoor has escaped, whether with or without the connivance of the Maharajah's officers is not known. The Maharajah himself is probably by this time in Aboo.

YET ANOTHER CASE OF SUICIDE BY A SOLDIER AT UMBALLA.—We regret to learn that another soldier of the 20th Hussars has committed suicide. Private Edward Sullivan shot himself yesterday morning, in the barrack room. We have not heard of any motive for the act.—Mofussilite, Oct. 2.

DEATH-RATE IN THE CENTRAL PROVINCES.—During June last the death rate in the Central Provinces was 2.21 per 1,000, or a total of 16,039 deaths in a population of 7,225,720. There were 214 deaths from cholera, 562 from small pox, 11,336 from fever, and 178 from snake-bites and wild animals.

DEATHS FROM CHOLERA IN THE PUNJAB.—During the week ended the 7th September the number of deaths from cholera in the Punjab fell from 1,084 in the previous week to 887. The decrease was general throughout the province, except at Ferozpur, Hoshiarpur, Faisalpore, Rawul Pindie, and Kohat. The largest number of deaths occurred at Hoshiarpur, where 154 were registered.

REPAIRS TO THE TAJ.—The Taj is undergoing a thorough renovation at present; workmen are engaged in repairing some of the small domes and the gateway, which are in a dilapidated condition. I understand that over Rs. 25,000 have been sanctioned by the local Government for this purpose. If so, the money could not be laid out on a better object than the Taj; and the fact of the Government having recognised this is another instance of the thoughtful administration of Sir William Muir.—Delhi Gazette.

THE LOCUSTS AT AGRA.—The locusts whose appearance in Agra on Saturday afternoon we announced yesterday, remained with us till the afternoon of Sunday. Not a tree in the station has escaped them. They have not only stripped them of leaves to a considerable extent but branches, thick and thin, have been broken off by their weight. The whole of Saturday night the snapping and falling of branches could be heard. We have no information yet of damage to crops.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 8.

LIGHT LITERATURE.—Michaelmas, the last number of "The Chameleon," is a striking improvement on its predecessors. There is absolutely nothing feeble in it, and there is much of real literary merit. Since it treats of no political questions a comparison with Fraser or Blackwood can hardly be made, but our high opinion of Michaelmas may be judged when we say that it is quite as good as a very good number of either of those famous periodicals, so far as their lighter articles are concerned. It is far superior to the best number that has ever appeared of London Society.—Pioneer.

THE PUNJAB NORTHERN STATE RAILWAY.—Those interested in State Railways will be glad to hear that Feeta Lall has been pleased to permit the immediate commencement of the Jhelum to Rawul Pindie extension of the Punjab Northern State Railway. We understand that several of the staff have arrived at their respective sections, so that the Baboo non contradicente, the staff, who are eager for their work will proceed with activity, and we hope in the course of the cold weather, just set in, make a good show towards completion.—Indian Public Opinion, Oct. 3.

AFGHANISTAN.—Hearing that the Ameer of Afghanistan was going towards Jellalabad, the Khozyanees are said to have commenced repairing their mud forts, and have cropped their unripe harvest. They have also removed their families, and are collecting ammunition. From this it would seem that the Khozyanees will not pay revenue to the Ameer without fighting. The following account from Candahar is given by an arrival at Cabul:—"The present Governor of Candahar is making money fast. He is oppressing the citizens and is extorting from them as much money as he can. Since it has been made known in Candahar that Syud Noor Mahomed Shah, who is in Persia at present, has been appointed governor, the officials of the place are very alarmed."

CHOLERA AT ATTOCK.—We regret to hear that cholera has broken out in the Attock garrison. On the 6th instant two artillerymen were attacked, one of whom was carried off by the disease, and the other unhappy victim, it is said, is not expected to recover. Both the men who have been attacked by the disease were previously much debilitated by illness. We are happy to learn that the detachment of the 60th Rifles, who form part of this garrison, have as yet been free. The troops have been ordered out into camp and proceed thither at once, and a strict quarantine has again been enforced. It is feared that should this outbreak spread, the assembling of the troops for the Hussan Abdool Camp of Exercise will be postponed. We hope, however, the plague which has made its appearance will soon be got under.—Indian Public Opinion, Oct. 8.

DEATH OF AN OLD SOLDIER.—The death of Lieutenant A. E. Madras, of the Pension establishment at Meerut, is announced. The deceased officer entered the army, the 1st Bengal Fusiliers, in March, 1829; served in Afghanistan with the army of the Indus in 1839-40; was present at the capture of Ghuzni, medal and during the Sutlej campaign, including the actions of Ferzshahur and Sobraon, medal and clasp; also with the Artillery (when he held executive commissariat charge) when the mutiny of the Bengal troops broke out on 1st July, 1857, for which he obtained the India Mutiny medal of 1857-58.

POISONED BY MISTAKE AT ALLAHABAD.—A strange and terrible event occurred here on Thursday last. A native officer of the Magistrate's Court had bought some medicines at an auction of the effects of a medical man lately deceased. Among his purchases was a bottle of strychnine, which he probably confounded with morphia, for he proceeded to vaunt its properties, as resembling those of opium, among a number of his acquaintances assembled outside the cutcherry. A number of these, who were opium eaters, petitioned for a sample, and some was there and then swallowed by six persons—five men and one woman. Of these three were actually lying dead in front of the cutcherry within twenty minutes. The three others were recovered by the use of the stomach-pump applied by the civil surgeon, who had at once hurried to the spot.—Pioneer, Oct. 10.

PUBLIC WORKS OFFICERS.—In an article on the Department of Public Works, the Indian Public Opinion draws attention once more to the calibre of the overseers and assistant overseers appointed from Roorkee to the Department, and gives the experience of an executive engineer of long standing as to the antecedents of "the general run of Roorkee overseers." "He either does not recollect, or never knew, the former trades of all the overseers he remembers to have served at different times under himself and his friends, but he gives us the following as specimens:—A Delhi tailor, who by the bye was a Roorkee man, soon found better employment, and a stonemason who died shortly after he came to him—both promised very well; an assistant in a Manchester warehouse, a Bank clerk, a Dissenting clergyman, a traveller for American notions, a groom, two clerks in shops or merchants' offices, and a lawyer's clerk, also a man of respectable parentage and education, who had employment previous to enlistment."—Pioneer, Sept. 28.

THE DELHI ANNIVERSARY.—The Delhi anniversary dinner held at Simla, when some fifteen or sixteen officers who served at that memorable siege sat down together, proved a great success. In an excellent speech, General Norman took exception to Kaye's account of the breakdown in the Commissariat, Adjutant-General's, and other departments, at the opening of the war. He turned to Dr. Charles, one of the party, who had marched one hundred and twenty miles in four days in that "merry month of May, 1857," with men of the old 1st Bengal Fusiliers, as absolute proof that the extreme delays spoken of by the historian had no foundation on fact. So much we may fairly admit, that, whatever the shortcomings of those Indian departments were, in time of actual war, civil war, with all odds against them, called up at a moment's notice, they were not as disgraceful as those of the British camp of exercise attempted in England last year in time of profound peace—surrounded by English farms and bumptkins!—Indian Daily News, Sept. 25.

LORD ULICK BROWNE AND THE CALCUTTA JUSTICES.—The ratepayers and residents of Calcutta, to the number of 2,505, have addressed a letter to the four Justices of the Peace, Mr. Roberts, Mr. Wyman, Babu Rajendralala Mitra, and Babu Kristodass Pal, in which they express their opinion upon the conduct of Lord Ulick Browne, the Chairman of the Justices, in the matter of the letter marked "private" which his Lordship sent round to the Justices of the Peace, requesting them to attend the meeting of the Justices on a certain day and outvote the above-named four Justices, who have for some time past rendered themselves conspicuous in their desire to put some check on the overbearing conduct and proceedings of Lord Ulick Browne, the Chairman of the Justices. In their letter the opinion of the ratepayers is fully expressed, and the services of the four Justices are referred to in such language as the following:—"Looking at your constant and devoted attention to the interests of the ratepayers of the town, your single-minded zeal in putting down extravagance and advocating reduction of taxation, your unflinching independence in the expression of your opinions, and your unwearied and disinterested labours in transacting the business of the Municipality, we deem it our duty to record our opinion that the imputations cast upon you are as unfounded as they are unjust and unmerited, and to give you an assurance of our respect, thankfulness, and confidence for your services to the town." The Pioneer would whitewash the peccant lord and make the world believe the "ratepayers" are indignant without due cause. The following paragraph from that paper shows how our contemporary daubs Lord Ulick with untempered mortar; he says:—"Two thousand 'ratepayers' of Calcutta have put their signatures to a letter to the four Justices accused by Lord Ulick Browne of 'factious opposition,' expressing profound regret that his lordship should have 'stigmatised' them, and also expressing their opinion that the stigma was altogether undeserved."

STATION TALK.

CHUDDERGHAT, Sept. 25.—In one of my previous communications I noticed the final decision of the Government of India in regard to Mr. Kaye, whose employment in the service of the Nizam's Government was vetoed by his Excellency the Viceroy. Mr. Kaye has since been to Bombay, and to the astonishment of all returned to Hyderabad a few days ago, with the view, it is said, of establishing a wholesale business here as merchant and banker, in connection with the eminent firm of Messrs. W. Nicol and Co., of Bombay. That Mr. Kaye will do a "roaring trade" in this large and populous city there is but one opinion; he possesses peculiarly tact and great energy, which eminently fit him to undertake a business of this nature. Such a firm as contemplated by Mr. Kaye has been a great desideratum. It is very difficult to procure wines and spirits of a superior kind here. One will scarcely find here such brands as Gledstane's, Tod Heatley and Co.'s, Cockhoo Campbell, and Co.'s, and last not least of the choice wines of the well-known firm of McDowell and Co., Madras. The spurious articles with counterfeit labels palmed off here as genuine by the petty tradesmen are greatly on the increase. Mr. Hardy Johnstone bid farewell to Hyderabad last week. Sir Salar Jung has forwarded, though with reluctance, it is said, the proceedings of the case constituting the ground of dismissal to the members of the Institute of Civil Engineers. Considering the nature of the offence, Mr. Johnstone has been dealt with most leniently by his Excellency: had he been serving the British Government he would have found himself in a serious predicament. It is reported that the Nizam's Department of Public Works is to be reorganised. At present there is only one superintending engineer, and the number is to be increased to five, one for each division. Mr. Haskoll is to be Chief Engineer of Hyderabad Division; he was formerly superintending engineer, but annoyance he received from Mr. Johnstone, the then secretary, was so great, that he felt it his duty to resign his post and accept the one offered to him as secretary to the Municipality. Mr. Haskoll possesses talents of a high order, and in season and out of season has done good service under the Nizam's Government.—Madras Athenæum Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

TRAVANCORE.—The Maharajah of Travancore has appointed a Mr. J. Ross, M.A., as the tutor of the young Prince. The Maharajah himself received his education from a native.

THE MURDER AT BANGALORE.—Corporal Allen, who was shot by Private Roddy of the 1-21st Fusiliers at Bangalore lately, died on Thursday morning, and was buried that evening. His murderer will of course have to stand his trial on the capital charge.

FLOODS AT ELLORE.—The Madras Times of Oct. 10 says: We learn by telegram, dated yesterday, that destructive floods have occurred at Ellore, by which nearly a thousand houses have been destroyed, and four thousand people rendered houseless. This certainly indicates a very violent monsoon.

CAMP OF EXERCISE.—The Madras Mail understands that Captain J. Pennycuik, of the Royal Engineers; Colonel R. Cadell, of the Royal Artillery; Lieutenant Colonel H. E. Dyneley, of the Madras Cavalry; Major P. L. Stafford, of the Staff Corps, and two other officers, will represent the Madras Army at the forthcoming Camp of Exercise in the Punjab.

NOT BAD FOR A BEGINNER.—We (Madras Times) decline most positively to give up the name of the clerk who communicated to us the following telegrams:—Experienced Engineer (Madras) to exalted Personage (Ootacamund)—“Leak in the Red Hills bund.” Exalted Personage (Ootacamund) to Experienced Engineer (Madras)—“Dam it.”

THE MADRAS PIER.—We understand the repairs to the Madras Pier have, for the present, been suspended, consequent on the want of the necessary funds to proceed with the work. It appears funds are not just now forthcoming. The sum of Rs. 5,000, sanctioned as a preliminary grant for the commencement of the repairs of the pier, has been expended, and until a further grant is made the work is brought to a stand still.

THE MADRAS CENSUS.—Dr. Cornish has reported to the Board of Revenue that the tabulation of the census cannot be completed by this month, and that it will take about eight or more months with the present establishment to finish. There are at present about 220 hands engaged in this work, and if it is deemed necessary to facilitate the completion of the Census within four months, 385 hands will have to be engaged at Rs. 17½ each hand.

MILITARY.—It is rumoured that Brigadier-General Woods, at present at Bellary, is to officiate in command of the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force until the arrival of General de Sausmarez's successor. We notice that Sir Alfred Wilde, who is mentioned as the probable successor to the command, will not leave England before the end of this month. Pending the arrival of General Woods, should the rumour to which we refer be correct, the acting command will, in the ordinary course, fall to the lot of the senior officer at Secunderabad, Colonel Ross, of the 2-24th Regiment.—Times of India.

LEAK IN THE RED HILLS TANK.—There was a report current a few days ago that there were leaks in the embankment of the Red Hills Tank, and that serious apprehensions were entertained. We learn that the engineer in charge of the tank is of opinion that there is no cause for any alarm. There has been a slight slipping of the embankment, but there are no leaks. The engineer has submitted a report to Government, and we have no doubt, considering the great anxiety that has prevailed with regard to the condition of the embankments of the tank, that the Government will not be slow in laying the said report before the public to allay the fears that have been aroused, more especially as we are in immediate expectation of the monsoon breaking. Colonel Ritherdon, the Officiating President of the Municipality, accompanied by Mr. Lee, the Executive Engineer of the same department, visited and inspected the Red Hills Tank yesterday.—Madras Times.

FISH BREEDING.—In what the Government of Madras considers “an unsatisfactory and meagre” report the Superintending Engineers of the Presidency make a show of reporting upon fish preservation. Pisciculture, however, is not engineering proper, and it is quite possible an R.E. who could erect a barrack would not be able to put up a fish ladder. Yet we think the Superintending Engineers in question should have done a better best. As it is, they hardly approach in breadth of information and accuracy of detail that famous tehseldar who had been called on to state what fish were found in his neighbourhood, and whose report when translated read as follows:—“In the Ganges there be many fish, some of greater size than the rest. The largest is the alligator, and the next porpoise. This latter much resembles a bheesty's mussuck, but whether it feeds on human flesh I cannot speak with confidence.” But the Superintending Engineers bring out one fact distinctly, that fish are as annoying as Irishmen or natives of this country in their indifference—“apathy” is the fashionable word—to the efforts of a paternal Government to improve their condition. The fish ladders, we are told, are never used by the fish, although they were built expressly for their convenience. We advise the Madras Government to make the use of fish ladders by the fish compulsory.—Pioneer, Oct. 1.

OPENING OF THE SOLDIERS' INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION FOR 1872, POONAH.

The Industrial Exhibition for 1872, of all articles made by soldiers, European and native, in the Presidency of Bombay, was opened by H.E. Sir P. Wodehouse, Governor of Bombay, and H.E. Sir A. Spencer, the Commander-in-Chief, at five p.m. on Monday, the 30th September, at the Assembly Rooms, Poonah. On entering the rooms on Monday afternoon a fine sight presented itself. Articles, useful and ornamental, beautifully set on tables arranged in long rows along the building, were to be seen. The afternoon was the finest of Poonah afternoons. A quiet peacefulness lay all around the building, and two fine regimental bands were present discoursing sweet music. About sundown the hall became crowded and somewhat disagreeably hot. The ladies of Poonah mustered strong. We have been in many parts of India, but in no assembly in India, not excepting Simla, have we seen so many finely trained ladies as in the assemblies of Poonah. We need not say Sir Philip Wodehouse was present, as was the Commander-in-Chief. We thought Major-General Grant, to whom the soldiers exhibiting are greatly indebted, never looked better than in the Hall of Industrial Art. We saw many fine soldiers, men known in Poonah and indeed throughout India. As we entered the Assembly Rooms we thought of other days. What changes have we not lived to see! If we measure things by events, it looks long since we were born. Progress is one of the marked features of our times. We have advanced and are advancing beyond the wildest dreams of our quiet-going forefathers—for the grand significance of the Soldiers' Industrial Exhibition lies not on the surface of things. Only fine seamen can detect the current and whither it tends. We are not sure if there were many men in the Assembly Hall on Monday afternoon who tried to measure, or could measure if they tried, the real significance of the scene on which they gazed. It is in soldiers' exhibitions, as in other things less noble, often darkest under the lamp. Great revolutions often occur altogether unperceived—unnoticed and unregistered. What then is the character of the revolution of which the Soldiers' Industrial Exhibition is an index? Our military policy has changed and is changing, as far as the treatment of our soldiers is concerned. Is that nothing? Who that knows anything of the past on this matter will venture to say so?

To mention seriatim the character of each article exhibited would be impossible, so various are the things to be seen in the Assembly Rooms. When there is so much to praise, it might be invidious to mention any names. We are glad to see the 56th not in the shade in this Exhibition. They exhibit some fine specimens of cabinet work. The 68th come out strong in models. The 83rd send some very fine needlework. The 49th exhibit excellent specimens of furniture. The 3rd Hussars appear to great advantage, especially in fancy work. We commend a pedestal library table, by Mr. Glennister, of the 66th. Also a portable chair, by Mr. Gale, of the 66th. Some fine fancy tea-pots, by Mr. Frost, of the 49th. A fine portable ladies' work-table, by Mr. Kinsbury, of the 3rd Hussars. A cabinet, a chest of drawers, and a tea-caddy, by Mr. Coote; also a fine case of jewellery. Above all we commend a model theatre, by Mr. Jaques; it is really a gem of contrivance. It can be worked by children. The piece being performed is "Richard I." We cannot specify all the deserving, where there are so many. If we do not speak to men above all advice we would recommend that two or three respectable soldiers' wives should be put in charge of the needlework and woman millinery department of the Exhibition. By such an arrangement there would be no violation of military decorum, and vast moral advantages would be gained. We rejoice to see the British soldier respected and made to respect himself. We may not see it, but the day is sure to come when our soldiers' wives, respected because respecting themselves, shall be treated considerably. Her day is coming.

To us there can be no greater pleasure as journalists than to help on the approach of that day when high and low, rich and poor, high officials, rank and file, will recognise each other's common rights as men. Service is not dishonourable. To be a British-soldier is to occupy an honourable calling. To the British soldier we say it is in your power to be respected. The way to secure this is to refuse to be a beast; to be a man, and respect yourself.—Deccan Herald.

STATION TALK.

RAJCOTE, Oct. 6.—There is no change to notice in the weather, which is clear, thermometer in the shade at noon 83 deg. Dengue is sun going its rounds, and I hear that in the house of a Brahmin official, not far from my residence, three persons are laid up. On Wednesday next (9th) the Political Agent, Colonel Anderson, leaves this place, en route to Bombay. His attendant, two sheristadars, and head clerk accompany him up to that place, with a view, it is said, of being introduced to Mr. Ravenscroft. There has been no public demonstration of any kind in honour of Colonel Anderson's departure—no address, no speech-making, no testimonial. Major Watson, Acting First Assistant, will be in charge of the agency until Mr. Ravenscroft joins. I mentioned in my last that the Jam refused to meet Colonel Anderson at Purduree on the plea of illness. So far I was correct, but it would appear that, the matter having been pressed upon him, his Highness was induced to visit Purduree yesterday, in order to meet Colonel Anderson, who it appears had a friendly and rather brilliant reception. The inspecting post-master has just left on a tour of visitation to Cutch. I believe this is the first visit since his appointment, now nearly two years. This gentleman commenced his career by instituting numerous prosecutions in criminal courts against his subordinates, in nine of which he proved successful, which speak volumes in favour of his activity and energy, though he is on the invalid establishment of H.M.'s Indian Army. The new lines for the Native Infantry Regiment are fast approaching completion, but the question is where will the head-quarters of the 7th Regiment be located on its arrival here? If additional lines be erected, there will be a useless waste of money. In short, it is a great mistake to send another regiment, or rather wing of one, to this place. During the mutinies, the then Political Agent, Colonel Lang, was asked by Government if he required additional troops. That gentleman's reply was—"No, but if Government are hard pressed, I can spare the troops in the province, as I have the greatest confidence in the loyalty of the chiefs and people."

BHOSAWUL, Oct. 9.—We have had two days' heavy rain, and judging by the appearance of the river Taptee, which rose in a very short time about fifteen feet, the rain must have been general over a large portion of the country. It is to be hoped the crops will not be injured. It will be a great pity if they have, because otherwise the season has been so favourable. The nights have set in cold and the mornings are delightful, so there is every prospect of four or five months' favourable weather. There are a good many cases of fever about, owing, I believe, to the great quantity of rank vegetation growing about the station, which otherwise is healthy.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

AN OBSTRUCTIVE CHIEF.—Bai Jevkore, the heroine of the recent re-marriage at Ahmedabad, happening to be a school-mistress before marriage, the Maharaj of Neriad has issued an order to the effect that any person sending his daughter to any school will be fined in the sum of Rs. 50!—Rast Gofar.

MUNICIPAL BILL.—We understand that the Ratepayers' Committee, at their meeting on Thursday, resolved to watch the action of the Bombay Government as regards the Municipal Bill very closely, and that in the event of their very reasonable representations being disregarded by the Poona Council, steps will be taken to bring the grievances of the people prominently before the Viceroy while here next month.

THE PARSEE POPULATION OF BOMBAY.—All the figures relating to the late census of Bombay have been summed up, but nothing particular has been given out. We are, however, enabled to state from a reliable source that the Parsee community in Bombay counts 49,050 men, women, and children.—Rast Gofar.

MILITARY.—The following troops are to proceed so as to arrive at Bombay prior to 12th November:—Poona Horse, from Seroor; four guns F-18th R.A., from Seroor; Head quarters 83rd Foot, from Poona, and detachments from Sattara and Aseergurh. The Royal Artillery and 83rd Foot, entire, will return to Poona so soon as they can be dispensed with in Bombay.

THE SINDH FRONTIER.—Lord Northbrook aims, it is said, at civilising the cattle-robbing cut-throats who keep unsafe the road of commerce between Sindh and the countries beyond Beloochistan. The Murrees, Bhogtees, and Doonies are all to be invited to meet his Excellency in durbar, and they will there, we presume, all receive presents.

ADEN PORT RULES.—Last January it was pointed out in these columns, beyond dispute, that unless the Aden port rules were speedily modified Canal steamers would find Aden too costly a place to call at. Lately a step has been taken in the right direction, though all that is required has not yet been done. By yesterday's mail we received a copy of the revised Aden port rules, from which we learn that although port dues remain the same—one anna per registered ton—yet pilotage rates have been reduced from one anna to four pies per ton, and mooring fees have been abolished altogether.—Times of India, Oct. 7.

THE LATE PROFESSOR HUGHLINGS.—A meeting of the committee appointed to collect subscriptions to perpetuate the memory of the late Professor Hughlings, of the Elphinstone College, was held lately, when it was resolved to put a full sized portrait of the deceased in the hall of the new college, and a sum of Rs. 2,000 to be invested in Government Securities made over to the University for a prize to be awarded out of the interest to the first successful candidate at the F. E. A. examination who obtains the greatest number of marks in the English paper. These resolutions, we hear, are not final, but they are shortly to be laid for approval before the subscribers.

KHANDEISH, &c., RELIEF FUND.—A meeting of the provisional committee has been convened at Fudtarey's Wada in Sadasiva Peit, when four members, including one of the secretaries, were present. It was resolved to remit at once Rs. 200, which had till then been collected, to the Relief Committee at Dhoolia, and to make further remittances of Rs. 100 each as soon as that sum was collected. In accordance with this resolution sums amounting to Rs. 400 were forwarded till Saturday last.—Poona Observer.

EXPORTS OF RAW COTTON INTO BOMBAY.—From a statement submitted to Government by the Cotton Commissioner we see that during the weeks ending 21st and 28th September 1,310½ cwt. of raw cotton were imported into Bombay by land—987½ cwt. by the G.I.P. Railway, and 323½ cwt. by the East India Railway. From another statement we observe that during the weeks ending 23rd and 30th September 1,593 cwt. of raw cotton were imported into Bombay by water, 661 cwt. from the province of Sindh, 228 cwt. from the Persian Gulf, 297 cwt. from Cutch, 29 cwt. from British Concan, and 378 cwt. from British Gujerat.

MARCH OF INTELLECT.—There was a large assemblage of Hindoo ladies in the bungalow of Babu Protb Chunder Mezmoodar at Girgaum on last Thursday. The ladies had certain scientific experiments shown them, and speeches of a social and religious character were made for their benefit by Professor R. G. Bundarkur and by the Babu himself. The ladies, who came from all classes of the community, were very much pleased with the proceedings, and it is proposed to hold a similar meeting every Thursday. The effect is surely in the right direction; for unless the Hindoo ladies of Bombay are imbued with correct notions, both socially and religiously, there is very little hope for the real prosperity of native society.—Times of India, Oct. 14.

DISSOLVING SCENES.—The floods of India laugh to scorn the engineering skill of which so great boast is made. Our most beautiful and imposing bridges appear for a little, are lauded to the skies, and before the echo of the plaudits has died away, the bridges dissolve and are no more. There have been a good many of these dissolving scenes of late. The public is put to great inconvenience by the interruption on the B. B. and C. I. Railway. It is said that two months must elapse before there can be direct communication between Bombay and Surat, and two years before the road can be restored to what it was (a consummation not very desirable perhaps). Too much water and too little water are the two great miseries of India, and we seem quite unable to cope with them. There has also been a serious interruption on the S.E. line, cutting off our communication with Madras; this has been restored, though not perfectly. Some time will be needed to repair the damage. It is also stated that passengers will be conveyed between Bombay and Surat, the transit of rivers being effected by means of boats. Perhaps we shall have to come back to this rudimentary process as a permanent thing.—Bombay Guardian, Oct. 5.

A TRIP ON THE "ABYSSINIA" TURRET SHIP.—Preparatory to going into dock, a very pleasant day was afforded on board her Majesty's turret ship the Abyssinia to a number of his friends by her popular commander, Lieut. James, R.N. Soon after eleven o'clock on Thursday last the invited guests were on board, and a little before one the huge monitor was ploughing its way seaward. En route she passed the incoming mail steamer, whose passengers must have wondered where she was bound for. Her mission, however, on this occasion was purely one of peace, and to give her vast machinery a very necessary airing. At 2.15 a most important announcement was made, and all hands were piped for action to attack a bounteous cold collation; and right well were the knives and forks plied until hardly a vestige remained. The repast was served in the new, much-needed, and comfortable accommodation on deck, recently provided for the officer commanding the ship. Next followed an inspection of the internal wonders, with an explanatory lecture on the guns, which were elevated and lowered with surprising precision and rapidity. The turrets were also set in motion, and the speed of their revolution was once round in fifty seconds! The descent into some of the Avernian chambers caused much merriment, but we doubt whether the fair ones who had the courage to attempt it thought it particularly facile, notwithstanding Virgil's dogmatic assertion that facilis descensus Averno. About 6 P.M. the Abyssinia had returned to her moorings, after having paid a passing visit to her sister, the Magdala, and received on board that monster's able commander, Lieut. Palmer, R.N. Her anchor was soon dropped, and amid the shades of night, which were falling fast, her visitors gave three hearty cheers for Captain James, and departed thoroughly pleased with their trip on a turret ship.—Bombay Gazette, Oct. 14.

INDIAN ARMY DEFENCE INSTITUTION.

The following is part of a paper read by the President of the above-named body at a meeting held on October 19:—

Since the establishment of this institution a retiring allowance has been granted to a certain proportion of officers of the Royal Artillery, and lieutenant-colonels unemployed in India have been permitted to reside, until further orders, in Europe on British rate of pay. The Under-Secretary of State for India most distinctly stated last session, in his place in Parliament, that a retirement scheme was under consideration, leading the service to hope that the army at large would have the benefit of such an offer as that made to the Artillery. The officers have again been doomed to disappointment. An order has gone forth that all officers physically or mentally disqualified for active employment are to be pensioned on ordinary rates; those of good character on a pension immediately superior to that to which they are entitled. This is a very naïve confession on the part of the Executive, that it accumulates a collection of physical and mental incapables, as well as bad characters, in its service. Whoever penned that despatch must have been innocent of a knowledge of the code and tone appertaining to British military life. Officers physically and mentally incapable should have been summoned individually before medical committees, and if found unfit for the service should, as was formerly the custom, have been transferred to the Pension Establishment. The term "misconduct" takes a wide range. It has generally been understood that dismissal from the service by sentence of a court-martial is the suitable punishment for "misconduct," properly so called. To the military mind, however, failure to satisfy the Government in the performance of any specified duty does not imply the use of such a severe term as "misconduct." Where an officer, if a man of honour, has failed in the performance of a duty, it has been usual for him to lose his appointment, if he possessed one, and there the matter terminated by his being remanded to his regiment. The result of the despatch, therefore, recently sent to India, will be nil, as there is no accumulation of incapables or bad characters, which the Government professes to believe exists, and the Commanders-in-Chief are too well aware of the responsibility which they labour under of casting stigmas upon officers which they may not be able to substantiate.

In the year 1871 the Bonus question entered upon a new phase. The Army Regulation Bill became law; and by this all the officers of the British line regiments, including those transferred from the service of the East India Company, were authorised to receive on retirement the sums usually paid in their regiments. The latter were thus to receive their bonus in full, as was customary under the Government of the East India Company, where an officer received a bonus on retirement according to what his position was worth, not with reference to previous payments made by him. His position was, in fact, his capital, the survivor obtaining the benefit of the payments made by his deceased comrades, and every line step being a source of pecuniary benefit. So that he reached a certain position, it mattered not how he attained it.

During the last session of Parliament the Under-Secretary of State for India was asked a question on the subject of payment of bonus in full to the officers of the old Indian army, reference being made at the same time to the officers of the new line regiments having received it. He replied that he did not see how it was necessary to apply the same rule to officers who were in different services. This is surely a narrow and bureaucratic view to take of this question. Those officers, although they may be directed from two different offices of the departments of the State, are in the service of one master, and that master their country. If it is just that officers in the British service who have passed only a portion of their time in India should not suffer from sudden changes of system, how much more necessary is it that the interests of those officers should be respected whose whole service has been passed in a trying and dangerous climate? The death of Colonel Sykes, who always remained a staunch and firm friend to the officers of the old Indian army, was a great blow to their cause. It was too late in the session to entrust the subject to new hands. It is the intention, however, of this Institution, in conjunction with the Bonus Compensation Committee, to make arrangements, with the view of having the question brought before the House at as early a period of next session as possible.

Since the suppression of the Mutiny, the Indian army has attracted the attention of the public but little. The day will, however, come when the condition of that army will be an important public question. When the clouds are darkening in the eastern horizon, and when there are indications that the storm will burst in the not distant future, it is surely little short of fatuous in the Government of India to keep alive a spirit of irritation and discontent in the minds of its European officers—those who are expected to be the mainstay of the Empire in the time of need. This Institution, however, did not appeal to policy, but only to right and justice.

DINNER TO SIR BARTLE FRERE.

On Friday night the Council and Fellows of the Royal Geographical Society entertained their Vice-President, Sir H. Bartle Frere, and his suite, at a farewell banquet, on his departure for Zanzibar, charged by her Majesty's Government with a mission to promote the suppression of the Slave Trade on the east coast of Africa. The dinner was held in Willis's Rooms, St. James's. Major-General Sir H. Rawlinson, K.C.B., President of the Society, occupied the chair, having on his right Sir Bartle Frere, the guest of the evening. Among the company, which numbered some 250 in all, were:—Viscomte Duprat, Count Strzlecki, Captain Sherard Osborn, R.N., Sir Rutherford Alcock, Admiral Collinson, Sir Donald M'Leod, Sir F. Buxton, Mr. J. W. Crawford, M.P., Sir E. Perry, Sir F. Arthur, Sir A. Kemball, Sir F. Arrow, Sir C. Nicholson, the Hon. G. C. Brodrick, Mr. H. W. Peek, M.P., Admiral Sir W. H. Hall, Mr. Kennaway, M.P., Sir H. Verney, Sir T. Fremantle, Sir H. Holland, Lord A. Russell, Lord A. Churchill, Sir Cecil Beadon, Sir J. W. Kaye, Sir L. Mallet, Colonel Stewart, Sir Frederick Goldsmith, Sir Vincent Eyre, Sir J. Hay, M.P., General F. Cotton, Sir H. Anderson, Sir H. F. Greene, Mr. H. Rassam, Mr. R. R. Murchison, Mr. Clements R. Markham, C.B., Dr. Mouatt, &c.

After the preliminary toasts the Chairman proposed the health of Sir Bartle Frere, as "not only a geographer and a patron of geographers; he is a statesman in the best sense of the word—(cheers)—an honest, thoughtful, and earnest statesman; one of those clear-headed and large-hearted men whose names will go down to after ages as benefactors of mankind." "It is highly honourable to him," he added, "and not to him only, but to the glorious Civil Service of the old East India Company, that he should have been selected out of his ordinary sphere of employment, and in preference to many able and experienced members of the regular Diplomatic Service, to fulfil the important and exceptional functions of his mission to Zanzibar. (Hear, hear.) That selection I believe to have been as wise for the public interest as it is honourable to the individual selected. We congratulate him upon the eminence he has achieved, and we wish him God-speed in his mission of peace and mercy. (Cheers.) I speak, I believe, the sentiments of all his friends here assembled when I assure him that if he succeeds in putting a stop to the detestable slave trade on the east coast of Africa a brighter, a purer, and a more enduring crown of glory will surround his brow than if he were the hero of a hundred fights. (Cheers.) There is one other subject in which we geographers take an interest connected with Sir Bartle's mission to Zanzibar. One of the standing problems in African geography has long been the configuration of the lake region of Equatorial Africa. We desire to have an authoritative solution of the question whether there is one great lake to the north of Tanganyika, the Victoria Nyanza of Speke and Grant, or whether there are three or more distinct bodies of water as recently advocated by Captain Burton, whose opinion in this respect is fortified by the native information collected by Mr. Wakefield, and also by the reports derived from native authorities contained in Dr. Livingstone's last letters. I am happy, then, to be able to announce that a young officer, Lieutenant Cameron, whom I am proud to see at this table, will volunteer, if the necessary permission is accorded him by the Admiralty, to go out under Sir B. Frere's auspices. That young officer proposes to proceed to the lake region in question, so as to determine authoritatively this long-pending controversy, and enable us to delineate with certainty on the map the leading features of that part of Equatorial Africa. Sir B. Frere's presence at Zanzibar will be of inestimable value both to Lieutenant Cameron and to Dr. Livingstone. We all, then, wish Sir B. Frere every success in his mission, and we are also deeply interested in his personal welfare. In conclusion, therefore, I call upon you to drink to his very good health, and to wish him a speedy return to his native country, after a successful mission." (Cheers.)

The toast was received with enthusiasm.

Sir Bartle Frere, in responding, said,—Nothing, I assure you, could have touched me more than Sir H. Rawlinson's allusion to my old friends in the service of the East India Company and of her Majesty in the East Indies. (Hear, hear.) I can most truly say I feel from the bottom of my heart that whatever was done by me in India could only have been performed through the aid of all those who were associated with me in the service of their country at that time. (Cheers.) It is cheering in the evening of one's days to see those about you who have grown grey in the service with you, and who are still ready many of them to do yeoman's service for their country, should it be necessary, in any quarter of the globe. But I feel yet more the compliment that has been paid me coming from you as the representative of the Royal Geographical Society. It has always struck me that there was something peculiarly characteristic of the practical bent of the English nation in the constitution and proceedings of the Royal Geographical Society. You find among its members men eminent in every class—men of science, men of literature, men who know all the secrets of nature and all that history has recorded in times past. But I have observed that nothing finds real favour with the Royal Geographical Society which has not for its object some practical purpose of good; and it is for that reason I feel assured that what I have undertaken, and that which the Royal Geographical Society have honoured with their notice this evening, is a matter of great practical importance. And I am glad to know that this undertaking in which I have embarked is one which is supported by the entire sympathy of those nations with which we are allied throughout the civilised globe. (Cheers.) I believe there is not at this moment one nation that boasts of being a civilised nation which has not sent in to the Foreign-office its adhesion to the efforts which her Majesty's Government have made and are making to put a final stop to the slave trade on the coast of Africa. (Cheers.) I can claim nothing more than a hearty desire to do good in my generation by giving some effect to this very limited effort, which it is a mistake, I think, to say is to be the extinction of the slave trade; because I fear that as long as human nature is what it is you will be liable to find the slave trade again showing its head if you do not look after it and keep it down. But I believe I may say that the measures which her Majesty's Government have now undertaken are such as practically will entirely disconnect all nations having any pretensions to civilisation from this abominable traffic. And if it remains in after ages it can only be by stealth, and as a thing which will attempt to raise itself up, whatever may be done by civilised states to put it down. It will be very much like crime in civilised countries, which may never be entirely eradicated, but which may be kept under by the exertions made to suppress it as soon as it exhibits itself. (Hear, hear.) But there is another fact which strikes one very forcibly in regard to all that is done by the Royal Geographical Society, and that is that we don't stand here as representatives of any member of your Society who is here present. I feel that all the light that has been thrown on this subject of late—all the brilliancy that we see around us this evening—is, as it were, but reflected from your great associate Livingstone. (Hear, hear.) It is to him, to his persevering efforts through a whole lifetime, that you owe the knowledge which you possess of this great evil, and also, to a great extent, your knowledge of the means by which it may be counteracted. I am afraid that Sir H. Rawlinson was a little sanguine in hoping that Dr. Livingstone and I might have the pleasure of meeting before I returned from this mission. If I know the Doctor aright, as long as there remains any part of the work that he has undertaken undone, nothing whatever, not even the whole of her Majesty's Government itself assembled at Zanzibar—(a laugh), would induce him to refrain from honestly and thoroughly completing it. (Cheers.) At the peril of his life he will do it, whatever may happen. And it is because I feel that at some humble distance we are all endeavouring to do the work which Livingstone commenced, and which has so long been and is now prospered by this Society—a work which was also the work of our late president, and which, as I can testify from what I have seen, is now the most congenial work of the Council of this Institution—it is, I say, because we are doing at a humble distance a small part of that work that I feel we have a guarantee of success. (Cheers.) And in returning you my most hearty thanks for the honour you have done me, I can only hope that we may all of us adopt what I believe is the motto of the good Dr. Livingstone, and what has long been the motto of our Indian Empire—"That Heaven's light may be our guide." (Cheers.)

Sir J. Kaye then proposed the health of the gentlemen who are to compose Sir Bartle Frere's staff. One of those gentlemen, the Rev. G. P. Badger, he regretted to say, was absent from indisposition. It had been said of Mr. Badger that he was one of the finest diplomatists in the world strangled by a white choker. (Laughter.) There could be no more fitting task for a clergyman than to assist in suppressing the atrocities of the slave trade. He coupled with the toast the name of Major Ewan Smith, whose services in the East he warmly eulogised.

The toast was drunk with cordiality, and briefly acknowledged by Major Ewan Smith.

Miscellaneous.

SIR W. GOMM.—Friday night's Gazette announces that the Queen has appointed Field-Marshal Sir W. Gomm, G.C.B., to be Constable of the Tower, and Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the Tower Hamlets.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.—To-day (Monday) their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will visit the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, at Elvedon Hall, Thetford. The inhabitants of Thetford are making arrangements to accord a hearty welcome to their distinguished visitors, and several triumphal arches will be erected in the town on the occasion. In the evening these arches will be illuminated.

THE LATE LORD MAYO.—The total contributions from the Civil Service towards the Mayo Memorial Fund amount at the time of writing to £1,355. 5s. We observe with regret that many of the most highly remunerated departments are conspicuous by their absence from the published list. A large number of subscriptions are still outstanding, but it is proposed to close the list on the 30th inst.—Civilian.

COLONEL IMPEY.—It is notified in Friday night's Gazette that a license has been granted to Archibald Impey, of Ireton-house, Cheltenham, Colonel in the Royal (late Bengal) Engineers, to take and use the surname of Lovibond in addition and after that of Impey, and to bear and use the arms of Lovibond quarterly, in compliance with the will of his cousin, George Brudenell Michelson Lovibond, Esq., late of Manchester-square, London, and of Old Windsor Lodge, in the county of Berks.

THE BURMESE AMBASSADORS.—On Thursday the Burmese Ambassadors, consisting of his Excellency Mengyee Maha Sato Konwooni Mengyee, Paden Woon Douk, First Attaché, Pungyee Woun Douk, Second Attaché, Perraydawgee, Secretary, Moung Mijii, Officer of the Imperial Household, and suite, attended by Major M'Mahon, and Mr. Jones, agent to the King of Burmah, lunched with the Commander-in-Chief, Admiral Sir Rodney Mundy, K.C.B., at Admiralty House, Portsmouth, and afterwards visited the ships in harbour and the dockyard.

INDIAN TROOPSHIPS.—Her Majesty's Indian troop relief steamship Malabar, Captain Sullivan, sailed from Portsmouth early on Friday forenoon for Rangoon with the 67th Regiment of Infantry and draughts of officers and men from other regiments on board, making her voyage out via the Suez Canal. A smart gale from the south-west sprang up, or rather increased to a gale from a previously fresh wind, in squalls accompanied with heavy rain, and the officers and troops on board, with the women and children accompanying them, must, it is feared, have met with very unpleasant experiences during their first day's voyage from the land.

THE LATE SIR DANIEL ELIOTT, K.C.S.I.—Our obituary column contains the name of an old and experienced member of the Indian Civil Service, who has just died at his residence in the Boltons, West Brompton, at the age of seventy-four—namely, Sir Daniel Elliott. He was the fourth son of the late Sir William Elliott, of Stobs, in the county of Roxburgh, and was born in 1798. He was educated at Edinburgh, and at the East India College at Haileybury, from which he went to India to enter the Company's service in the Madras Presidency. Here, having held several civil and judicial appointments, he rose to become a member of the Council, and afterwards was a member of the Legislative Council of India. He received the honour of Knighthood, and the Order of the Star of India, in recognition of his services, in 1867.

CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES.—We have dealt elsewhere with the subject of the pro rata increase of salaries in the Civil Service, and earnestly hope that the movement will be successful in securing the object in view. On the 25th ult. a meeting of the Central Committee was held at the Charing Cross Hotel, at which most of the departments were represented, but a few yet remained which had not given in their adhesion to the movement by electing delegates. The meeting was adjourned for a fortnight to give these unrepresented departments the opportunity of joining in the agitation, and we hope that when the committee meets next week it will represent a united Civil Service. It is necessary above all things that there should be unity and determination, for the justice of the claims now advanced is so strong that resistance cannot be fairly made to them. We have received several letters on the subject, but we regret that we are unable to publish more than one or two, which, however, represent the ideas of the whole. One of our correspondents inferentially accuses the committee of being asleep, but we do not think the accusation just, and we hope that the contrary fact will be fully demonstrated within the next few days. But there can be no doubt that both in London and the provinces the movement is exciting intense interest, and it will not be for want of support in the Service if the committee should fail to secure the object for which all are striving.—Civil Service Gazette.

THE NEW FAMILY FUND.—We congratulate the Service upon the completion of the arrangements for the establishment of the new fund for the Widows and Orphans of Chaplains, Staff Corps Officers, and medical men. While feeling alive to the importance of such a fund, and anxious that it should come into operation as soon as possible, the home authorities object to be tied down to a fixed rate of interest on the assets; therefore, in lieu of the 4½ per cent. proposed to be allowed, they leave the rate an open question, to be decided by Government from time to time. With this exception the rules are sanctioned, and a telegram is about to be despatched to India authorising their immediate publication. It has been stated the fund is to be managed "without profit or loss" to Government; if so, we fear the pensions will be very small, and not to be compared with those of the existing Military and Orphan Funds, while they may be open to fluctuation. Nevertheless, considering that half a loaf is better than no bread, it is satisfactory that something will now be done to supplement the meagre scale of pensions granted by the Royal Warrant. The short-sighted policy (if policy of any kind it can be called) which closed the old presidency funds at the time of the amalgamation, is at length admitted but not repented of. Had this blunder not have been made, machinery would not now be required; as it is, the expense of working the new fund will have to be borne by its members, while those officers who have to pay large arrears will naturally complain that they were not permitted to meet the claims as they became due. Is it too much to hope that some restitution may be made by Government undertaking the cost of the management of the fund?—Home News.

THE THROUGH ROUTE TO INDIA.—Turkey is even more anxious than England to see some railway or other made across Mesopotamia to the Persian Gulf. She has of course her own pet plan—she would greatly prefer a line which would bring Stamboul and Bagdad together by a line from the Black Sea to the Persian Gulf, passing through Aleppo. But almost any railway that should be constructed to suit the requirements of our Indian traffic would be useful to the Ottoman Government, for sooner or later the junction rail with Constantinople would be laid, and Asia Minor would thus be opened up. The Turks are therefore preternaturally active in this business, and Midhat Pasha during his brief Wuzerate commissioned a band of surveyors to examine and report upon the route which may be called the alternative of that which starts from Alexandretta. M. Pressel, the well-known engineer, with MM. Tchernik and Schutt—also gentlemen of repute and experience—have started to lay down the best line via Tripoli and Palmyra. Were the Mesopotamian Railway to be taken by this way it would cross the Euphrates to the Tigris Valley, and reach Bagdad by a course of about 180 leagues. This was the favourite plan of Midhat Pasha, who knows the country well, and its advantages are great. First of all, it sets out from a healthy spot, and one that might be made into a populous port, instead of from that wretched hot-bed of fever, Alexandretta. Next, it avoids the tremendous difficulty of the Akkpo mountains, and, by crossing the Hauran, gets easy gradients, and the comparatively large business of the Tigris Valley. If the Khedive were not so busy in Abyssinia and the Red Sea, he would perhaps run a narrow-gauge line from Suez to the Persian Gulf along the top of Arabia. Such a line, which might follow the parallel of latitude, would keep the Medina traffic to Egypt, and the diplomatic obstacles to it would be far graver than those of soil and construction. The coast of Syria is vilely off for harbours, and whatever starting-place may be chosen will infallibly be a pis-aller compared with Smyrna, Stamboul, or Alexandria.—Daily Telegraph.

Spirit of the Home Journals.

RUSSIA IN CENTRAL ASIA.

The Pall Mall Gazette protests against a notion which manifests itself in various forms and in all sorts of quarters, that if it were thought desirable upon the whole to interfere with the progress of Russia, and if England were prepared to undertake the risks of a war in the Baltic and the Black Sea, it would be impossible, or even very difficult, to operate against the Russians very effectively from India. Though the objections to such a step on our part are obvious, and are indeed so great that nothing but very strong pressure should overcome them, there can be no doubt at all that if we decided upon facing them we might involve the Russians in enormous difficulties. This point is continually overlooked, and it is just as well to insist upon it a little. In the first place, the position of the Russians throughout the whole of what used to be independent Tartary is very much more artificial and very much less settled in every respect than our own position in British India. Even in the more warlike parts of India, British rule depends, to a very great extent indeed, on something very different from mere naked military force; our laws and institutions are silently but effectually taking root in the country, and we are coming more and more to be recognised as the supporters and upholders of social order and peace. It is different with the Russians. As soon as they get beyond the Caspian they are masters of the ground they stand on, and as far as the immediate dread of their troops extends, and no farther. They live in the midst of a population intensely hostile, in many places nomadic, and everywhere accustomed to war. To raise these populations against them, to supply them with arms and leaders, to make British India their back and base of operations, would be no very difficult matter; and if the step were taken it might lead probably to the expulsion of the Russian armies from the whole of their recent conquests without much sacrifice to the lives of British subjects. We need not insist upon the difficulties and dangers of such an undertaking. They are obvious enough. To enter into relations with such barbarians is like treading on a quicksand. It is infinitely easier to get in than to get out or to know where you are going when you are in. Such a policy would, of course, involve a war with Russia, and this in itself would be a great undertaking. Moreover, we could neither desert nor hold in hand our barbarous allies; and of course we should be exposed to intrigues of the same kind on the part of the Russians against our own territories. All this is manifest, but it does not interfere with the proposition that, if we were disposed to injure the Russians, we have the means of doing so. Again, it ought not to be forgotten that Afghanistan is practically sure to be on the side of that Power from which it has least to dread; and if India is to be invaded, the invaders must pass through that country. The policy of the Government of India for years has been to abstain from all interference with the internal affairs of the country, but to lose no opportunity of doing good offices in different ways to the Ameer. So long as cordial relations are maintained with the ruler of Afghanistan we have an ally at hand who has the strongest interest which can be conceived against the advance of Russia, an advance which must of necessity involve the loss of his own independence. A single step in advance on our part would excite the alarm of the Afghans, and lay them open to any inducements which the Russians might think proper to hold out to them. A writer in the Times lately observed that if we wished to stop the Russians the only proper and manly course would be to take possession of Afghanistan and Central Asia and rule over them. This appears to us about as wise a remark (though it is by no means an uncommon one) as to say, If you really fear that France will take possession of Belgium take it yourselves. The obvious reply is that whatever Power attacks Belgium will make the Belgians call in the assistance of whatever Power does not attack them. If the Russians have designs upon British India, we cannot possibly play into their hands more effectually than by taking measures which would force the Afghans and the inhabitants of Central Asia to call upon the Russians to protect them against us. Our whole career in India has been one long series of wars with enemies of all races and nations; French, Dutch, Portuguese, Spaniards, and every variety of native race that ever crossed the mountains. The Russians would no doubt do infinite mischief, but India is a country in which whoever holds the purse can get as many soldiers of a sort as he chooses to pay for, and with proper leading and management they are by no means bad ones. If battles had to be fought in the Punjab and even in the North-West Provinces, they would not be the first that have been fought there, nor is it easy to suggest any one bribe which the Russians could hold out to the natives as against us. Most assuredly they would have to pay just as heavy a land-tax under Russian as under English rule, and they would probably be treated a good deal more harshly in a variety of ways. It is a fair probability that if such an invasion took place the mass of the people would bury their property and cower down over their fields waiting to see which would get the best of it, while the fighting men would repair in any numbers to the side which paid them. A want of faith in our own resources is by no means unjustified in these days; but it is too much to assume that we are powerless in India against invasion. It is true all the same that the time is at hand when Russia will be able to exercise a very disturbing influence in India without actually invading it; and if we are to prevent that we must adopt other policies than those which now prevail, and show that we are able as well as willing to make any such attempts dangerous.

The Morning Post considers it too late to think or talk of giving aid to the Khans of Central Asia. The Russian question has got far beyond that, even if at any time the policy of aiding the States of Central Asia were wise, or legitimately open to us. The Post goes on to quote the opinion of General Jacob in favour of occupying the Bolan Pass, and continues:—General Jacob has stated that by occupying Quetta, up this pass, we "could operate on the flank and rear of any army attempting to proceed towards the Khyber Pass," so that it would be unnecessary to do more than merely watch the mouth of the Khyber Pass from Peshawur. But even without actually occupying Quetta we might so arrange as to do so speedily, and with the best advantage, whenever we chose. If we had a branch line from the Indus Valley Railway from Sukkur through Jacobabad to Dadur, at the entrance to the Bolan Pass, and possibly even up to Quetta itself, we should unquestionably at once open up a good trade with Central Asia, while becoming virtually in possession of Quetta; and this, coupled with the subsidising of the Khan of Khelat's tribes, would place us in a position to defy invasion by the north-west, provided of course that we could readily send troops from the Mediterranean to Kurrachee, with which port Quetta would be in close railway connection. The most obvious steps therefore to be taken to keep merely abreast of Russia in her progress towards India would be to construct the Euphrates Valley Railway. There is nothing that Russia could take umbrage at in the making of the railway to the Persian Gulf and to the Bolan Pass. She is steadily pursuing her own way, and we should act similarly. If Russia's mission is to settle Central Asia, ours may be to open up Mesopotamia. If Russia is going to develop the trade of Central Asia, we, too, may endeavour to do so by making the Bolan Pass the gateway of an extensive trade between England and Turkistan.

SLAVERY IN EAST AFRICA.

The Daily Telegraph says all that we really have to check is the passage of slaves from the coast to Zanzibar. To permit this we are at present pledged by treaty stipulation. A compact so infamous must be rent up as if it were waste paper. And if the Imaum of Muscat threatens, surely England can protect the Sultan of Zanzibar, so long as he remains true to his word and closes the gates of his kingdom against slave cargoes. It is no longer for us to "regulate" the diabolical traffic; we have simply and unflinchingly to stamp it out. It must not be forgotten that, as the House of Commons Committee reports, "any attempt to supply slaves for domestic use in Zanzibar will always be a pretext and a cloak for foreign trade." We might as well allow tobacco and brandy to be imported freely into the Isle of Wight, and then attempt to check smuggling between Ryde and Southampton. And, indeed, the very principles under which we protest against the trade as such, order us imperatively not to make any show or pretence of controlling it, but to boldly and fearlessly forbid it for once and for all. We have a perfect right to do this—to insist that the unclean abomination shall be altogether swept away.

HAZARA.—We learn from the Lahore paper that dengue continues among the railway employés. Cholera has again appeared at Hurrupore in the Hazara district.

THE PROPOSED CARWAR RAILWAY.—An important despatch from the Secretary of State to the Government of India, dated Aug. 14 last, with regard to the proposed railway from Carwar through Hooblee to Gudduck, has been placed at the disposal of the press. His Grace says he should have been prepared to give his sanction to the immediate commencement of the work were it not that there are considerations which have induced him, very reluctantly, to defer a little longer conveying to the Government of India his final authority for the execution of the project. He is of opinion that extreme caution must be exercised at present in entering upon projects involving a large expenditure of public money. The proposed line was "suggested and encouraged on purely commercial grounds, and must be adopted with regard to commercial results;" and before it is undertaken, it becomes a matter of the first importance that the commercial prospects of the lines should be made the subject of the most careful and searching inquiry that is possible. On various points, the Duke points out, the information before him is far from complete, and he indicates the questions on which further information is desirable. The propositions that the line to Carwar will absorb the whole of the future traffic of the ports of Carwar, Coompta, and Vingoria, and that the export of cotton from the Dharwar district will remain at the same amount as at present, appear to his Grace to be open to doubt. The despatch thus winds up as regards the financial success of the line:—"The foregoing considerations appear to me to throw some doubt upon the financial success of the line; at all events they are, in my opinion, of sufficient importance to render further and more precise information necessary before commencing the work, and I have, therefore, to request that your Excellency will direct your attention to the various questions to which I have adverted, and cause such enquiries to be made as may supply the materials for a more satisfactory estimate of the financial prospects of the line than are at present in my possession. I have only to add that, much as I regret the delay which the inquiries I have directed you to make will cause in the prosecution of a work in many respects so promising, and to which so much time and labour have already been directed, that regret is diminished by the present high price of iron, which, although affording by itself no adequate reason for postponing the undertaking, would have appreciably enhanced its cost to an extent which, it may be hoped, it may be possible to avoid in another year."

PROSPECTUS.

Mr. CRASKE desires to receive Boys at an early age—as soon as they can read well—in order that he may have charge of their Education from the very commencement of their studies.

Great care is taken that the elementary subjects are first thoroughly mastered, and that each Boy writes a good legible hand.

The next two or three years are devoted to Classical* and Mathematical work; and Mr. CRASKE is confident that the best of his Boys will be found able, at the age of Thirteen, to compete successfully for the various Scholarships now open to competition at Eton, Harrow, Winchester, and other great Public Schools.

The Classical and English Department is under the direction of AUSTIN R. WHITEWAY, Esq., Graduate in Classical Honours of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Mr. CRASKE himself takes charge of Arithmetic, Euclid, Algebra, and the higher Mathematics. Each Boy, in these subjects, is under his own personal instruction.

The French and German Languages are taught by competent Masters.

TERMS:

For each Boarder ... 60 Guineas.
Those who remain after Thirteen Years of Age ... 80 Guineas.
Day Boys and Weekly Boarders by Special Agreement.

These Terms include Drawing and Drilling. The charge for Laundress is also included. The only extra subject is German, the charge for which is Two Guineas per Quarter.

Mr. CRASKE considers it an essential part of a Boy's Education that he should be taught to Swim. He has, therefore, constructed a Bath twenty-five feet in length, with warming apparatus, to carry out this object effectually.

There are three Vacations in the year—a fortnight at Easter, seven weeks at Midsummer, and five weeks at Christmas.

DELHI; AND OTHER POEMS.

Bengal Civil Service.

"Mr. Kelly is a writer whose poems are poems. Delhi, the chief poem, is remarkable as showing that its Author can write good heroic verse; and others in the volume show an equal command over blank verse, lyric metres, and even ballad measures, as witness, for the last, a capital piece on Marathon."—Graphic.

"The World's Martyrs,' a long poem written in quatrains, shows much command of language; and another upon Dante, in the same metre, is equally praiseworthy."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"His volume is remarkable alike for high aims and facile accomplishment."—Court Circular.

"The volume contains much graceful and excellent verse, and proves that Mr. Kelly is a writer of high culture."—Civil Service Gazette.

"Mr. Kelly's sonnets on the events of contemporary history are very good."—Illustrated London News.

"It seems to us that the Author enjoyed in India many conditions of climate and country highly favourable to a successful cultivation of the muse, and the surpassing beauty of many passages in these poems, descriptive of Indian scenery and legends, goes far to support our view. The principal poem is on Delhi, in which we have given us a vivid picture of the growth of the old Mogul Empire, and of the recent mutiny."—Standard.

"Mr. Kelly assuredly may claim to have no inconsiderable share of the poetic gifts. . . . Contains more real poetry than nine out of ten more pretentious volumes with which the soul of the critic is afflicted."—Orchestra.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

LIVER COMPLAINTS AND DISORDERS OF THE BOWELS.—It is impossible to exaggerate the extraordinary virtue of this medicine in the treatment of all affections of the liver or irregularities of the bowels. In cases of depraved or superabundant bile, these Pills taken freely have never been known to fail. In bowel complaints they are equally efficacious, but they should then be taken rather more sparingly, for every medicine in the form of an aperient requires caution when the bowels are disordered, though a more gentle or a more genial aperient than these Pills, in moderate doses, has never yet been discovered. If taken according to the printed instructions they not only cure the complaint, but improve the whole system.

PROSPECTUS.

The object of this Company is to acquire the sole right to use Captain Dickey's Patent in the construction of steamships to run, in the first instance, between England and the Continent.

The class of steamers now employed in this service is wholly inadequate for the present, and still less for any increased, passenger traffic with the Continent; while the first vessel proposed to be constructed on Captain Dickey's plan will be in accordance with the general principles set forth in the Times in its leading article of May 4, 1872, of which the following is an extract:—

"But what if the difficulty could be solved by a mere improvement in the construction of ships? That is Captain Dickey's suggestion. He believes that vessels could be constructed which would offer all the requisite comfort and convenience, and which would enter the harbours of either coast with even greater facility than the present packets. He derives his suggestion from a rude device employed in the coast waters of the Indian seas for neutralising the action of the surf. To give a rough description of his plan, he would cut a ship in halves from stem to stern, and unite the two halves by girders, placing the paddle-boxes in the middle, and constructing over the girders a spacious deck. Such a vessel, he believes, might have a very shallow draught, and would be extremely steady and buoyant. Professional opinion can alone decide whether such a plan is as feasible as Captain Dickey believes. His authority is considerable, and he says he has the support of practical men. But if such vessels can be built, it is at least evident that the scheme of the Dover Harbour Board will become superfluous, and still more any larger scheme. Moreover, it is no slight argument for at least trying Captain Dickey's scheme, that the experiment might be made at the cost of a single steamer, and without any co-operation from France. All schemes for improving the harbours must be hampered by the latter condition, while schemes for improving ships are entirely within our own competence. The ingenuity of our men of science is now fully directed to the question; and mechanical science would certainly seem as capable of accommodating ships to harbours as of adapting harbours to ships."

An approximate estimate has been obtained from one of the most eminent firms of shipbuilders, who calculates that vessels of the proposed description can be completed, fit for service, for £75,000 each.

A pamphlet can be obtained at the offices of the Company, fully explaining Captain Dickey's scheme, the prominent advantage claimed being:—

1st.—A form of vessel calculated to reduce to a minimum the pitching and rolling motion.

2nd.—Fine airy saloons on deck, and numerous cabins affording greatly increased comfort and accommodation to passengers.

3rd.—Special facilities for the shipping and landing of passengers' luggage without removal from the vans.

4th.—The vessel, owing to her light draught of water, will be able to use the existing harbours with great facility and safety.

In addition to the importance of obtaining the most comfortable mode of transit for passengers, it is confidently believed that the proposed steamers will prove a commercial success, for, even assuming as a basis the present limited amount of traffic, due to the small and inconvenient class of vessel employed, there would be an ample return for the capital invested.

It appears from Captain Tyler's Report to the Board of Trade, 29th June, 1869, that 141,633 persons passed between Dover and Calais in 1868, which number has since considerably increased. Assuming that one-half of this passenger traffic were carried, a proportion which it may be fairly expected a vessel of this description plying between the above ports would secure, a handsome profit would be realised by the Shareholders, and equally good results may be anticipated from running this Company's Steamers between other Channel ports.

No promotion money will be paid, and no preliminary expenses incurred beyond the actual cost to be paid in the formation of the Company.

The remuneration to Captain Dickey for the use of his patent rights has been fixed at a sum of £10,000 in fully paid-up Shares, which will not receive any dividend until 7 per cent shall have been paid to the Shareholders. Captain Dickey will also be entitled to an additional 10 per cent. on similar conditions, in fully paid-up Shares, on any further capital, up to the amount of £500,000, issued by the Company, and he will join the direction after the establishment of the Company.

Contract entered into: date, 18th October, 1872. Between William Thomas Young Dickey, of the one part, and Edward Alfred Smith, on behalf of the Company, of the other part.

The above Contract, and a model of the proposed Steamship, may be seen at the Offices of the Company.

Prospectuses may be obtained at the offices of the Company, of the Brokers, Solicitors, or Bankers.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail, are—from Bombay, October 21; Agra and Madras, October 19; Calcutta, October 18.

LORD NORTHBROOK left Simla with his staff on the morning of the 14th October, for his cold-weather tour. Halting for the night at Dagshai, about half way down the hill, he resumed his march next morning and reached Ambála in the afternoon. The road to his camp was lined with our own troops and those of the Patiala and Jhind Rajahs; whose pipers seem to have been dressed as much like Scotch Highlanders as they could. The great Darbár on the 17th was attended by the Chiefs aforesaid, with the Rajah of Nabha, the Nawáb of Malair-Kotla, the Sirdar of Kulsea, and other chiefs of less rank. In the course of the usual formalities dresses of honour were presented to Sirdars Autar Singh and Mitt Singh of Malodh, in acknowledgment of the help they gave towards suppressing the Kuka outbreak. The substance of the Viceroy's speech we have already given from the telegrams. We may add here that, in touching upon the arrangements lately made for extending the Sirhind Canal through the dominions of Patiala, Jhind, and Nabha, his Lordship hailed Nabha's share in the transaction as "an auspicious commencement of his rule." The Viceroy started that same evening for Lahore, where the Rajahs of Kapurthala and Faridkot were to pay him their respects.

SOME ill-advised partisans of Mr. Forsyth have given out, through the new Simla journal, that the Duke of Argyll, at the instance of the Indian Government, has "exonerated Mr. Forsyth from blame" in respect of his share in the Kuka business. The announcement, which had been quietly accepted by most of the local editors, is flatly contradicted in the Friend of India, whose readers are assured that there is "not a word of truth" in the same; the decision of the Secretary of State having "never been in the slightest degree altered." Mr. Forsyth's friends had much better let sleeping dogs lie.

THE last two meetings of the Legislative Council were held at Simla on the 9th and 12th October. On the former occasion

Sir John Strachey's Bill concerning the Land Revenue in Oudh was referred to a Select Committee for its report, and Mr. Egerton's Bill regarding Municipalities in the Punjab was passed. On the 12th Sir R. Temple's Punjab Salt Bill and the Punjab Opium Bill were duly passed.

THE cholera, we regret to see, has broken out at Pesháwar, in spite of the precautions taken against its spread thither. Up to the 14th October 14 Europeans, including Captain C. Armstrong, and 16, or as some accounts say 60 natives, had died of the disease. One result of this new and seemingly unforeseen outbreak has been the postponement of the manœuvres at Hassan Abdal to the 1st January next. The camp at Bangalór appears to have been finally countermanded. The Dengue appears to be subsiding in Madras, but fever is very rife at Nassirabad both among the troops and the townspeople.

WITH reference to the Slave-trade in Zanzibar, we are glad to see that a despatch to India from the Duke of Argyll has already invited Lord Northbrook's "serious attention" to the well-known statements contained in Dr. Livingstone's letters. His Grace in fact challenges the Indian Government either to refute those statements or else to bestir itself to "prevent her Majesty's Indian subjects from being agents in the monstrous abuses which are thus disclosed, and to inflict the severest punishment which the law allows upon those who lend themselves, directly or indirectly, to the prosecution of the slave trade." The Indian Government is reminded of the stringent provisions laid down by our laws against persons who in any way abet the traffic, whether by contracting for the removal of slaves, by fitting out slave ships, by advancing money for such purposes, or by shipping goods for employment in the slave trade. Any British subject therefore who has any hand in removing slaves or persons destined for slaves from one part of the African continent to another, his Grace would consider guilty of felony. Even in the case of British subjects who help to import slaves into Zanzibar, his Grace would bring them if possible under the working of the Act. Any difficulty in dealing with the Act appears to him to have been solved by the powers committed to the Governor-General under Act 32 and 33 Vic., cap. 98. The tricks and evasions of the Banians must be followed out and baffled with the aid of the local courts of justice which are armed with ample powers for that end. As for those natives of India who have taken up their abodes in protected States, his Grace recommends the Viceroy to deal with them as he best can by means of revised engagements with the rulers of those States.

THE floods at Ellore in Madras have played havoc with the houses, if they have spared human lives. Thirteen hundred houses have been washed down, and four thousand people left homeless.

ON three successive days the Bombay Legislative Council met to discuss the Bombay Municipal Bill. It was strongly opposed throughout by Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, Mr. Forbes, and one or two other members, but the third reading was carried by the Government.

MR. C. B. SAUNDERS having resumed his post at Haidarabad, Colonel Lumsden left that place at once for Upper India.

IN connection with the Viceroy's tour, the following notification has just been issued from Simla:—

It is hereby declared that it is expedient that the Governor-General shall visit certain parts of India unaccompanied by his Council. The Hon. Sir John Strachey, K.C.S.I., is nominated to be President of the said Council during the time of such visit, and the powers of the Governor-General in assemblies of the said Council during the time of such visit shall be reposed in the said Hon. Sir John Strachey, K.C.S.I., except that of assenting to, or withholding his assent from, or reserving for the consideration of her Majesty's pleasure, any law or regulation as provided in 24 and 25 Victoria, cap. 67, and the Governor-General is authorised by this order, made for that purpose, alone to exercise all or any of the powers which may be exercised by the said Governor-General in Council in every case in which the said Governor-General may think it expedient to exercise the same, except the power of making laws or regulations; and it is notified that, under the provisions of section 9 of Act 24 and 25 Victoria, cap. 67, the Governor-General in Council is pleased to direct that his Excellency's Council shall, on Saturday, the 16th November, assemble at Bombay, in the jurisdiction of his Excellency the Governor of the Bombay Presidency.

A RECENT telegram from Calcutta gives the latest known figures with regard to this year's cholera outbreak among the British troops in India. It appears that since the first outbreak to October 25th there have been 828 cases and 529 deaths among European soldiers, their wives, and children in Bengal. From the first outbreak at Peshawur to 29th October the cases of European soldiers were 57, women 8, and children 19; the deaths were, of soldiers 45, women 6, and children 15. The disease still lingers, but its intensity has decreased.

THE published figures of the recent Census for Bengal confirm the statements already made in the Calcutta papers regarding the difference between the estimated and the actual population of that great province. Instead of 43 millions, the actual numbers exceed 66½ millions, exclusive of those for British Barmah. The contrasts between different districts of nearly equal area are sometimes very great. Mymensing for instance contains 2½ millions, and Tirhoot over 4½ millions in an area of about 6,800 square miles, whereas the Chittagong Hill Tracts with an area 800 miles larger has a population of only 69,607. Midnapur numbers 2½ millions in an area of about 5,000 square miles, while thrice that area in Chota Nagpur contains only 406,000 souls. Nowgong in Assam is only a trifle larger than fever-stricken Bardwan, yet the latter counts a population of two millions against a quarter of a million in the former. Tipperah on the other hand, once reckoned at only 100,000, returns a total of a million and a-half. The most populous district for its size appears to be Saran, followed by the twenty-four Pergunnahs. After these come Tirhoot, Rangpur, Bardwan, Jessore, and Hooghly. Calcutta itself returns a population of 447,601, or less by about 150,000 than the number estimated ten years ago.

MAHARAJAH HOLKAR has certainly sent home a handsome contribution to the funds of the East India Association; and the letter announcing it expresses a becoming sense of the services which that body has begun to render the countrymen of the Maratha Chief of Indore. It is pretty to note his Highness's satisfaction at the "disinterested and patriotic exertions" of the society in question; and his hope that the press of this country and all well-wishers of the British Empire will "heartily co-operate in the great cause of making the British rule in India a just and benevolent one" will no doubt spur some of those friends of India to yet stronger efforts on her behalf. The picture of India as an orphan, who "needs all the kindness and generous sympathy Britain can give it," is a touching appeal to our paternal bosoms. Nor can anyone doubt that "a better knowledge in England of India's people and their wants" will beget "frank, mutual confidence, and earnest sympathy." It is only a pity that one who preaches—by deputy—after this charming fashion should mar the effect of his sermon by the policy he himself pursues at home. His fatherly love and care for his own people has hitherto betrayed itself in a course of cruel exactions under which all classes alike, from the thakur to the ryot, are described as groaning. One Political Agent after another records fresh instances of a paternal kindness so oppressive, that the heaviest burdens borne by his neighbours within British ground are mere fleabites in the comparison. Holkar's encroachments on the lands and rights of his subjects would have driven them long since into rebellion, but for the presence among them of those guarantees for peace, but hardly for good government, British officers and British troops. In no part of India at this moment does misrule abound so flagrantly as in Malwa and Indore. The very money which Holkar sends home in proof of his desire for England's sympathy has probably been wrung from the poor neglected "orphans" for whom he affects to plead. The East India Association, however, will perhaps console themselves with Vespasian's remark on the proceeds of a certain tax—Nummus haud olet: Money has no smell.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Times points out an error, which perhaps we may have helped to disseminate, regarding the descent of the Sassoons in Bombay. That the Sassoons are not exactly Parsees their name alone, we think, would indicate. "Sir David Sassoon," for instance, has far more of a Semitic than an Aryan look, and the patronymic "Sassoon" sounds akin to the Arathoons and such-like families of Armenian Jews in India. The Sassoons of Bombay, according to the same correspondent, are Jews, who have been established there for the last thirty years, while branches of the same family are doing a large business in China and Japan. In Bombay they have always been distinguished for their munificence and their loyalty to the British Crown.

MR. MASSEY's return to Parliament as member for Tiverton should gratify those persons of whatever politics, who take an impartial interest in Indian affairs. As an avowed opponent of the Indian Income-tax he will anyhow prove a welcome addition to the party represented by Mr. Fawcett. It is a cheering sign of the times, when a candidate for a seat in the House of Commons makes special reference in the course of his canvass to any Indian question of the day; and Mr. Massey's experience as an Indian Chancellor of the Exchequer will add considerable weight to the opinions uttered regarding the most vexatious of Indian taxes by one who, before his departure for India, had held rather a prominent place among English legislators. Parliamentary pledges must of course be taken with large allowance; but if Mr. Massey's uncompromising speech at Tiverton meant anything, he is likely to prove a powerful ally to the opponents of a tax in whose expediency no one acquainted with India can sincerely believe.

SIR BARTLE FRERE is a statesman of whom British India may well be proud, and his present mission may be taken as a special compliment to the service in whose foremost ranks he had few equals. If, as we have heard it whispered, he cherishes the hope of one day ruling as Viceroy the country in which he gained his great renown, we see no particular reason why that hope should not be fulfilled. Some years before he became Chief Commissioner of Sindh, Mr. Frere had risen from the post of private secretary to Sir G. Arthur, then Governor of Bombay, to the political charge of Sattara, which he governed with conspicuous ability for two years and a-half. As Napier's successor in Sindh from 1851, he continued with a master's hand the wise policy begun by the shrewd and strong-willed ruler of the land he had conquered from the luckless Amcers. His success as a governor was crowned by the fearless energy with which he faced the issues of the great Sepoy Mutiny in 1857; hurrying off to Multan one of his two British regiments, and keeping the peace of his own province without aid from Bombay. His subsequent services as a member of Lord Canning's Supreme Council were fitly rewarded by the Governorship of Bombay. There too Sir Bartle Frere acquitted himself on the whole with marked success, leaving behind him an impression not to be effaced even by his partial complicity in the downfall of the Bombay Bank. Sir Bartle, in short, has fairly proved his claim to the homage offered him in Colonel Malleon's review of his Indian career. But there is no need to fill up his record with the fruits of other men's labours, as Sir H. Rawlinson did in his speech at the banquet of November 1. It was not Sir Bartle Frere, but Sir C. Napier, who "found Sindh a desert and left it a garden," nor was it Sir B. Frere who "succeeded in converting the lawless marauders of Sindh into a peaceful and industrious peasantry." Napier's successor, as we are told in effect even by Colonel Malleon, did little more than build on Napier's lines. It was Napier who tamed the Beluchis into good policemen and steady cultivators, who lowered the assessments on the land, encouraged trade, founded a good revenue and judicial system, and planned the canals and harbour-works which his successors have carried out. In fact, as the Colonel, his former eulogist, rightly observes, "there are few great improvements which have been introduced into Sindh up to the present day, of which the idea did not originate with him." Sir Bartle himself, we imagine, would be the first to own his debts on this score to the great administrator, whose genius for civil government he seems to have admired as warmly as almost any man of his day.

In Mrs. Ross Church's recently published memoir of her father, Captain Marryat, we are enabled to realise the distinguished part which the author of "Peter Simple" played in the Burmese War of 1824-5. He was only 32 years old when, as Commander of H.M. Sloop Larne, he succeeded for a time to the chief command of the naval force in the Irrawaddy. A sailor trained under Lord Cochrane was not likely to miss a chance of damaging his new foe; and Captain Marryat's services in aid of Sir Archibald Campbell were heartily acknowledged both by that officer and the Governor-General. Wherever a stockade was to be stormed, a creek explored, or a fleet of war-boats chased and destroyed, Marryat's sailors never failed to answer the call upon them, in spite of the trying weather and the ravages which cholera at one time made among the crews. When the troops on one occasion were stopped by a deep nullah, Marryat and his men soon improvised a bridge for their use. At another time the excellent practice of his gun-boats drove the Burmese from their strongest stockades. He himself was more than once laid low with fever; but he served on to the close of the war, always making his presence felt by friends and foes; and in 1827 he was made a Companion of the Bath for the many brilliant services, to which Sir A. Campbell had owned himself unable to do adequate justice.

We are glad to learn that the newly-promoted Majors of the Indian Ordnance Corps are at least to be allowed the option of subscribing as Majors to the Military Funds of their several Presidencies. To debar them from a right so clearly consequent on their improved standing would indeed have been a proceeding without excuse. We only wish that the time had come for making the further announcement that a Major of Indian Artillery or Engineers was henceforth to receive the full pay of his new rank. What reason there can be for withholding from him this last concession, a mere piece of ordinary justice, we fail to comprehend. The one great motive for turning first-captains of artillery into majors was the importance of the work they had to do; and to give them the higher rank without the higher pay was a stroke of economy all the less excusable in view of the different course adopted by the War Office. We can but hope that the present concession will prove to be the first step towards placing them on the same pecuniary level as their comrades in the old Royal Artillery, to say nothing of the majors in other branches of the service.

EXAMINATION.—Mr. J. D. Ferguson, executive engineer, third grade, passed a creditable examination in the Guzeratee language on Sept. 5, according to the test prescribed in the Public Works Code, Irrigation Branch.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, November 11, 1872.

THE MEETING AT THE MANSION HOUSE.

THE meeting at the Mansion House on Monday last bore cheering witness to the sympathy which has once more been aroused in London with the cause which Sir Bartle Frere is about to advocate in Zanzibar. Whatever fault some critics may find with the mode in which the English Government proposes to carry out its purpose of putting down the hateful traffic it has hitherto seemed to wink at, so far as Zanzibar is concerned, the Bishop of Winchester might fairly point to the throng of eager faces gathered around him in the great hall, as a proof that the old fever had broken out again, "the blessed fever which swept away in the time of our fathers that accursed evil from the Western Coast," and was now pledging itself to sweep the same plague away from the Eastern Coast of Africa also. The well-known talent of the Right Reverend son of William Wilberforce could not have been more fitly exercised than in denouncing the dreadful progress on one side of Africa of that slave trade which his father had been foremost in helping to put down on the other side. And in addressing an audience largely composed of city men, with whom mere sentiment would have less weight than arguments couched in the language of the markets, the Bishop at any rate showed his good sense by dwelling upon the commercial drawbacks involved in the continuance of a traffic which "devastates and depopulates God's earth;" which has indeed so wasted the border lands on the East African coast, that, whereas a few years ago they were filled with people who grew cotton and raised crops of grain, "you might now travel 120 miles and find not a single hut nor a human inhabitant." Every year in fact the margin of waste land grows broader, as village after village is fired and the surviving people are carried off into slavery by the ruthless Arab emissaries of Indian Banians at Zanzibar. And the longer the road from these villages to the coast, the sadder also becomes the waste of life among the wretched captives during the journey. Dr. Livingstone has already told us that for one slave who reaches the coast, seven or eight perish on the way or in the process of capture. Already the manstealers have made their way across Lake Nyanza, and carried desolation into villages on the other side. As for those who survive the miseries of the long march to Kilwah—miseries described by the Bishop in terms but too faithful to recorded facts—we know what becomes of them in the crowded Arab dhows which convey them to Zanzibar and elsewhere.

Whether it be better for a slave to fall into the hands of Christian or Mohammedan masters, is a question which we need not stop to consider. It is enough to observe, with all deference to Bishop Wilberforce, that the lot of slaves in Asiatic, especially Mohammedan countries, has certainly not on the whole been less tolerable than among the nations of the West, in spite of the advantages offered by the latter on the score of Gospel truths. More to the purpose was the Bishop's argument for interference in "a trade carried on in the main—nay almost exclusively—by British capital advanced for the purpose by British capitalists." In other words the Banians, or Indian merchants, who send caravans of Arabs inland from the African coast to trade nominally for hides, gum, and ivory, but really for those things and slaves also, are mostly British subjects, even when they live in States, like Zanzibar, more or less dependent on British rule. These Banians, according to Livingstone, manage the custom-house at Zanzibar, and, under cover of importing slaves into that island for home use according to the treaty, they make large profit on the human chattels which their unscrupulous agents with their connivance carry elsewhere. It is sad enough to know that the authorised import of slaves into Zanzibar serves to increase the Sultan's revenue, but what defence can there be of a traffic which reserves for Zanzibar no more than 1,700 of the 20,000 slaves who are shipped off from Kilwah in the course of a year? More than 90 per cent. of those who survive the land-journey are therefore sold into slavery in defiance of all law and treaties. If to this heavy percentage we add the 90,000 or so yearly slain by the Arab man-hunters or by the hardships of a long march, it is easy to see how heavy an obligation rests upon the Sultan's English protectors to suppress a traffic at once atrocious in our eyes and infinitesimally profitable to the Sultan himself. It is even a question whether the fractional profit to Zanzibar is not immeasurably outweighed by the consequent hindrance to the growth of lawful trade, and even by the political dangers involved in the regular influx of so many lawless Arabs from the mainland.

In what way we shall put, as Bishop Wilberforce phrased it, "the hand of a little obliging necessity upon" the Sultan, is a question which Sir Bartle Frere may safely be entrusted to answer with the help of the English Government. Some of those present at the Mansion House meeting cheered Mr. Stanley's unqualified protest against "compounding with villainy," by transferring to our own shoulders the payment of the tribute due by treaty from Zanzibar to Muscat. It would of course be easy for a strong Power to put any amount of pressure on two small princes in the Persian Gulf. It is excellent, as we know,—

"To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant."

In stooping to pay Muscat a small subsidy of £8,000 a year, provided that the Sultan of Zanzibar agreed to forego his right to import slaves, England would not be guilty of making terms with a felon: she would simply be offering an equitable price for the setting aside of an unpleasant bargain. The Inam of Mascat is entitled by treaty to a certain yearly payment from Zanzibar, and it would be sorry justice to mulct the former for a fault committed by some one else. If the original bargain was a blunder, it was not Muscat that made it; and unless Muscat has done ought to render the bargain void, we can hardly call upon her to forego a guaranteed addition to her small revenues for the sake of helping us to discharge cheaply a long neglected duty. Mr. Stanley himself declares that England had the largest share in imposing the tribute upon Zanzibar; and yet we find him asking why England should be "magnanimous" enough to repair her own error at her own expense.

Some doubt has been thrown upon the honest desire of the English Government to act up to the apparent purpose of the mission entrusted to Sir Bartle Frere. That gentleman however has publicly vouched for the good faith of those who are sending him to Zanzibar. "Whatever," he said, "may be the result of this mission, I can here beforehand most decidedly say that, if it is not attended with success, it will not be because the Government have not given it their decided and most determined support." He felt equally certain that the authors of the existing treaty with Zanzibar had the cause of freedom quite as much at heart as those who were listening to him on Monday last. It must be owned however that the extent of their sympathies could hardly be inferred from their diplomatic achievements; and those who charged them with being false to modern English principles in respect of slavery might plead some colour of justification in the state of things which the treaty with Zanzibar has brought about. Similar charges against the good faith of the Indian Government have been made, we hope, in ignorance of the conditions under which they and their servants have been forced to wink at evils which they could not prevent. When Mr. Stanley accused them "of compounding with villainy" by means of the coolie trade with the Mauritius and Seychelles, his rather reckless statements were promptly met by Bishop Ryan, who asserted from an experience of thirteen years that the trade in question "had nothing whatever in common with slavery," nor was there "the slightest tinge of slavery" in the labour of the negroes and Indian coolies in those islands.

INDIAN IRRIGATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—On my arrival here yesterday I saw your Paper of the 22nd October; and, considering the importance of the question, whether the millions of borrowed money which are about to be expended on irrigation canals in India are likely to give any suitable return or to result in loss, especially in the present embarrassed condition of the Indian Exchequer, I beg you will allow me to reply to your remarks upon my letter of the 18th of last month.

Regarding the Ganges Canal, you say that, in a recent letter to the Times, the net revenue for 1870-71 is set down at £103,312, or 4·3 per cent. on a capital account of £2,402,438; and that, if to this be added the enhancement of land revenue due to the canal, the rate of profit would be raised to 5·34 per cent. You rightly observe however that this reckoning does not tally with the 7½ per cent. of Colonel Chesney, but that officer, you presume, must have spoken of the return for 1871-72.

In reply to the foregoing I would observe:

1st. That the capital account of £2,402,438 does not include all the sums expended in respect of said canal until its completion; and that if the interest paid on the sums borrowed for its construction, and the loss occasioned by excess of charges over revenue in previous years were taken into account; in fact, if the capital account were kept in the regular manner in which the accounts of similar undertakings are generally kept, it would amount to about £4,000,000; and the net revenue named would therefore be equal to only 2·58 per cent.

2nd. That to obtain the net revenue of £103,312, instead of the whole of the expenses incurred in 1870-71 being deducted from the gross revenue, a considerable portion has been carried to capital account. How far this transfer has been made on correct grounds is not shown in the annual report; but, looking at the defective mode in which the capital account has been kept, it is just possible that, for the sake of showing a greater profit in the year's operations a larger amount has been transferred than is consistent with sound principles.

3rd. That with respect to the 1·04 per cent. which has been added to the rate of profit, for enhancement of land revenue due to the canal, no such enhancement can reasonably be ascribed to the canal, since the country traversed by it was previously irrigated by wells, and already assessed at the enhanced rates applicable to irrigated lands.

4th.—That Colonel Chesney's evidence having been given at the commencement of 1871-72, could not have related to the return obtained in that year.

Regarding the Eastern Jumna Canal, you say that the net profit for 1870-71 amounted to 19·76 per cent. of the capital outlay. That outlay, however, represents, not the cost of construction (for the canal was made by the Mahomedan Government before the introduction of British rule), but the mere expense incurred in restoring the works. To calculate, therefore, the rate of profit on such outlay can be of no practical use in determining the question whether it would be profitable to construct new canals. For the same reason, the Eastern Jumna Canal should be left out of calculation, when the object is to ascertain the results obtained from the canals constructed by the British Government. If this were done, the average yield would be found far below the rate earned by the Ganges Canal, for the other irrigation works have all left worse results, several of them not having earned enough to cover even their working expenses.

I would now refer to the remark that "it takes time for these artificial rivers to settle down into a fully controlled regime, especially when the people are slow to avail themselves of new facilities," and I would submit

1st. That if no proper control has been obtained over the working of the Ganges Canal during the last seventeen years that it has been worked, for it was opened by Lord Dalhousie in 1855, what guarantee is there for any materially fuller control hereafter?

2nd. That the people of India have not been slow to avail themselves of facilities and advantages which have been offered to them, as was shown by the readiness to use railways as soon as these were opened, although they had, in that case, to overcome deeply-rooted caste prejudices; nor have they been any-wise backward in accepting the facilities offered them for educating their children.

The reason of their not availing themselves to a greater extent of the Ganges Canal water, is that the canal is defectively constructed, its slope being so great that the water runs to a low ebb in the dry season when it is most needed for irrigation. The velocity of the stream moreover causes injury to the works by the accumulation of silt and otherwise, and the canal has consequently to be often closed for repairs when its water is much wanted. This uncertainty has induced cultivators to rely rather on their wells than on the Ganges Canal.

DELTA.

THE HINDUSTANI ABROAD.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Now I begin to fulfil my faithful promise to write again soon.

Some days succeeding the last occurrence before narrated, Mahmoud Shah and the humble individual in question, repaired down to the Crystal Palace, by the London, Chatham and Dover High Levelled Railway. When we comfortably arrived at destination it seemed gigantic in enormous proportions and raised up as if by the magic wand of a jin on the top summit of a commanding eminence. When we reached inside gushing fountains were playing in the midst, and handsome youths and rosy cheeked maidens tightly holding arm in arm, were gliding to and fro, whispering in the middling aisle. Same time the tremendous harmonious organ was peeling with growling tunes. I asked Mahmoud Shah "What talisman have these Europeans got to create such a paradise for eight annas per head each?" Mahmoud Shan only rolled his tongue in his cheek, being speechless without answer.

One thing I notice with astonishment. White statues of naked men, and females without a rag, are standing upright on either hand, gazing down coolly upon the passengers! I cannot raise my eyes from ground, because it is not our custom. Mahmoud Shah notices; he is saying, "Never mind, this is nothing; you get soon accustomed." But I think inside my chest, "How strange that this wonderful country, mother of civilisation and enlightenment, has no shame or modesty!" I was glad to reach the Aquarium, which is in a tunnel in the soil underground. Soon as we enter, a shortish, fat gentleman, with long nose, reddish, intelligent countenance, and his head in a felt black hat, of wideawake manufacture, same as the Padrees wear in India, came up and explained all the story of the fishes, and where they were born, with numerous illustrated anecdotes of their customs, very entertaining and authentic. I scratched my head with puzzling curiosity that this is the very Solomon of fishes and wonderful creatures. How, in the name of God, can he know all this without living first in the fundamental bottom of the sea? Having taken respectful permission to depart from this talkative wise one we amuse our minds with air and exercise in the lovely horticultural gardens rose-embowered, where throat-thrilling nightingales with red topknots sing and hop, but too chilly soon to sit because in this European climate it makes natives of burning Hindostan shiver. So we go backwards into the knave. When we reached the top Mahmoud Shah is pinched with hunger in his belly and says he is dying for eating! Therefore we ran to the dining room, second class. We order rice curry and Irish estew but not got, only caper and mutton boiled. Soon as we begin to devour, other people chewing turn round and stare, also waiters stare and some one whisper "Dam Nigger." This first time little rudeness in England. After going back in train, Mahmoud Shah and your humble correspondent have long unparliamentary discussion that Englishmen castes have got or not. Mahmoud Shah says "Yes, because the high caste never eat at same table with low caste; high caste never give daughter to low caste if he can help; high caste polite, civil, obliging; low caste say "Dam" and give abuse. High caste clean, low caste dirty. What difference to our caste in Hindustan?" I tell him this all very well, but low caste Doom cannot change himself into Brahmin; here low caste menial if very clever, very lucky, very captivating with ornamental countenance before he die, may lead to Hymeneal rites, rich, lovely daughter of a noble prince. Prince cannot help. Then children No. A1 caste according to Cocker.

But enough Mr. Editor without intruding into your valuable space.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, Delhi and Other Poems. By C. A. Kelly, M.A. Longmans, Green, and Co. 1872.

This little volume of well-written verse, the production of a Bengal Civilian, deserved an earlier notice at our hands than we have been able to accord it. Mr. Kelly, to judge from this sample of his poetic powers, may claim high rank among the literary stars of the Anglo-Indian firmament. The poem on Delhi, written in the good old heroic couplet of Dryden, Pope, Byron, and Campbell, carries the reader musically along through all the leading scenes in the life-drama of a city, where so many strange and memorable things have happened, from the day when—

"The potent slave, Mohammed's favourite, comes With stately march and thundering roll of drums," to that when—

"— England's sons 'gainst traitor hosts array'd, For Eastern Empire drew the avenging blade," and glorious John Nicholson pressed on to death at the head of his bold Fusiliers—

"The proud stern man they fear'd, yet loved so well."

The theme itself is stirring enough to fire the dullest fancy with some touches of its own romance, and Mr. Kelly proves himself capable of rising to a fit occasion. To both theme and metre he does fair credit, as the following lines will show:—

"A visioned splendour of a vanished fate,
A city crowned with more than mortal state.
There in old years the royal banquet glowed,
From minstrels' lips the melting numbers flowed;
Voluptuous strains the despot's heart beguiled,
And blushing beauties trembled as they smiled.
Well might they fear a Lord, whose lightest breath
Could change their songs of joy to shrieks of death.

In yon imperial halls they lay reclined,
Those lords of earth, and monarchs of mankind;
Around me breathe the love, the hate, the fears,
The thousand passions of those burning years:
When ruled the wise in council, great in war,
And just in heart, magnificent Akbar;
When Selim's love bade empires rise or fall
To charm the wayward heart of Nourmahal;
When the arch-traitor, Aurungzebe, arose,
And with wild war-notes scared his sire's repose,
Saw one by one his baffled foes fall down,
And staked his lying soul to win the crown."

The wrong accent in "magnificent Akbar" may be forgiven a poet who can write like this. In "The World's Martyrs"

Mr. Kelly suggests comparison with Tennyson's "Dream of Fair Women," both on account of the subject and the metre. The idea however of passing in review a long train of historic characters is many centuries older than the Poet Laureate, and it is no sin to borrow another poet's metres, if they are not disfigured in the borrowing.

The apparition of Regulus—

"Wish stern, dark eyes, that spoke of martial sway,
And brow of noble cheer.
High-souled and calm, as when he sought the tomb,
A self-made exile, and went forth alone,
Well knowing that the hated city's doom
Was purchased by his own—" and the subsequent stanzas on Hannibal, "in conscious strength sublime," are almost worthy of a place beside Horace's noble odes on the same themes. The stanzas on Falkland are equally good in their way. "Marathon" is a spirited version of an oft-told tale. The stanzas on Dante and those on Modern Italy have the true poetic flow and inspiration; and the sonnets on Clive, Benares, Cawnpore, Lord Canning, and Henry Lawrence, contain some noble and suggestive thoughts clothed in graceful and often eloquent verse. As a song-writer, also, Mr. Kelly acquits himself with marked success in the lines to "Constance," and on "The Old Love and the New."

MR. CAMPBELL'S EDUCATIONAL REFORMS.

The Indian Daily News observes that the distinctive features of the new scheme are as follows:—The director of public instruction, instead of remaining the independent head of an exotic department, becomes a sort of under-secretary to Government in one of the executive branches of the general administration; and it is not improbable that the post in future will generally be held, as in former years, by an experienced covenanted officer. Commissioners will be entrusted with a control over the working of the department not unlike that which is now exercised by them over the working of the police—allowance, of course, being made for necessary departmental differences. And district magistrates, who of all the higher executive officers know most of the real condition of the people of their districts, will, under the title of Vice-President of the District Committee, exercise the greatest influence in the selection of suitable teachers, and in the general working of the department. Looking to the scheme as a whole, we are disposed to welcome it as the first great effort that has been made to emancipate the country from the thralldom of scientific government—a thralldom which, baneful wherever it has fastened on the people, has been doubly baneful in the province of education, in which a cramped policy has contented itself with producing superficially educated men, who are equally useless to themselves and to their country, while the great mass of the people has been left to grovel in ignorance and misery. If, as Mr. Campbell tells us, the object which he has placed before himself is "the improvement of the humbler classes of the people, by making them intelligent human beings," that object is one which no English gentleman need be ashamed to pursue. We observe that Mr. Campbell has fallen into the hands of the Philistines by making a casual allusion to the "blessing of Providence;" but we have no doubt that if he can only succeed in converting the ignorant and suffering millions of Bengal into "intelligent human beings," the world will forgive him an old-fashioned belief in Providence, even though cynics do not cease to sneer at blessings which become visible in material facts. It has been pointed out that the educational policy now introduced into Bengal is at variance with that which has hitherto been uniformly pursued throughout the empire, and there can be no doubt that this is the case. But if the change is one which is full of promise for the future, it is open to us to hope, either that Mr. Campbell has previously obtained the sanction of the Supreme Government, or that the latter, reading Mr. Campbell's great object in a true light, will invite other Governors to follow his bold example.

WHAT DOES HOLKAR WANT?

The Pioneer asks, what is it that Holkar wants? not only to be cotton spinner, railway contractor and cannon-founder. There is some hidden ambition behind—some cherished desire which he is determined to attain. He had a deputation going about London shawled to the eyes last year, one of the number, a respectable Bombay photographer, being freely taken by the servant girls for a prince, and now Mr. Dadabhoj Naroojee is closeted with him daily. The Secretary of the East Indian Association, which was established for the benefit of the people of India, seems likely to take a brief for the Prince who of all others most neglects his people and their interests. It is a serious drain on a State when its chief has grievances or claims, for the advocates he selects are often of a shy or shady character. A Brumnam bagman once found his way to a native court; he was pushing and plausible, and he got large orders for goods; he also got a commission for costly cotton machinery, which he duly executed; then he passed through Bombay gorgeously attired and breathing vague magnificence. Shortly he returns from England with a secretary who is as mysterious and important as himself. The pair disappear, and are again heard of in England driving four-in-hand drags in the Park, living at the most costly hotels, interviewed daily by the greedier class of electioneering agents and the like. The hardware vendor actually stands for a vacant borough, spends large sums of money, and is defeated; but, to show he bears no malice, he presents the charitable institutions of the honest constituency with a few hundreds of his master's money. Filthy lucre can do a great deal with Briton or Parsee—with professional or amateur pleader; but it might be worthy the consideration of such princes as Holkar whether an open discussion of his mysterious claims in the Indian Press might not do some good. Nobody wishes to reduce the amount of the honorarium to be earned by hired advocates, but in the interests of the truth we have perhaps some right to repeat our inquiry—What is it exactly that Holkar wants?

BY RAIL TO CAPE COMORIN.

The Madras Athenæum holds that the speedy completion of the line of rail to Tinnevely is a matter of great moment to the merchants of the flourishing town of Tuticorin, and to those Madras merchants who have important agencies there. These especially should not cease from agitation till the rail is a fait accompli. There are no class of men in India who more need shaking up than those engaged in public works. It does them so much good, that many of them should be labelled, like medicine bottles,—"Please to shake this well." The line when opened will be a great boon to this Presidency in many ways. First of all, as to the passenger traffic. A man who wishes to get to Tinnevely now has to pass the best part of a week on the way. Leaving this on the evening of one day, he will arrive on the afternoon of the next at Trichinopoly. Half of his journey to Tinnevely, as far as mere mileage is concerned, is thus accomplished, not absolutely speedily it is true, but comparatively with very great swiftness. At Trichinopoly he will have to entrust his bones to a transit, and will receive, for four days or so, a terrific shaking. He will find the high road to Tinnevely through Madura a magnificent specimen of neglect, a conglomeration of rut and pit, of stones and puddles, and broken bridges. The roadside avenues will be found to be in many places conspicuously by their absence. The travellers' bungalows on the way, in which he must perforce spend his sultry noons, will be, for the most part, found to be boxes into which the glare, not the air, freely enters. Along the road he will notice long strings of bandies and native travellers, attesting to the traffic of the country, and the need for some system of communication better than that which exists. He will pass through a fertile country, and that ancient city, once the centre of South Indian Hinduism, and even now one of the most important native towns in the peninsula, Madura. A railway through this country will be, therefore, an immense boon, not only to Europeans, but to the very numerous native population. But although such a line would be a great comfort to passengers of all kinds, its chief importance would result from the fact that along it immense quantities of produce would flow to the port of Tuticorin, which port (now that Port Lorne has not yet been opened) is by far the most important one existing on the Coromandel coast of this presidency. The country through which the rail would run is extremely fertile, and densely populated. The looms of Madura, fed from the immense tracts of neighbouring cotton cultivation, would pour their trebled wealth into Tuticorin. Any one who knows this town cannot but remember the caravans of bandies, so to speak, which daily enter into the place over a road more wretched, probably, than any other road in India! Those who recollect Tuticorin during the American War will remember what immense quantities of cotton flowed into the place then, when right and left lakhs of money were made or lost in a week! In short, the proposed railway would afford a splendid outlet for the fertility of North Tinnevely and the manufactured wealth of Madura, in a way which has never yet been done, although what has been done in this direction has been wonderful. And not only cotton—rice for Ceylon would be a most important item of export from Tuticorin. In every way, the opening of a railway south of Trichinopoly would greatly develop the resources of the country. The Government should therefore push on matters, that Lord Hobart might have, ere long, the pleasure of himself seeing the first train travel to Tinnevely.

LIVING ON THREE HALF-PENCE A WEEK.—Three half-pence a week is, according to the Settlement Officer of Fyzabad, the amount which each member of the cultivating community draws from the kindly soil of Oudh. This is not a conundrum; for, says Mr. Carnegie, each cultivator—and he distinctly means by cultivator the owner of a farm, the head of a family—receives Rs. 12 per annum in crops. Now, a family in a country where population is increasing and marriage universal, must consist of at least four persons, so that the husband, the wife, and two children at least must share in this twelve rupees, which will give two shillings a month, or sixpence a week, for the four, three half-pence each.

The first thing which strikes anyone who sits down to the study of these figures is the systematic way in which we have hitherto gone on understating the population of this province. Turning to the Annual Report of 1870-71, we find the population of Bengal set down at something under 43,000,000, whilst the figures now before us exhibit an increase of not less than 50 per cent. Between the old and the new return the difference in some districts is perfectly ludicrous; Tipperah, for instance, put down as having 100,000 inhabitants, shows fifteen times that number. Pubna, Backergunge, Dacca, Noakhally, Tirhoot, and Monghyr, all show double the figures at which they were formerly put.

HOLKAR'S GIFT TO THE EAST INDIA ASSOCIATION.

The following letter from the Dewan of Indore will explain itself:—

"Indore Palace, Indore, Sept. 23, 1872.

"DEAR SIR,—I am desired by his Highness the Maharajah Holkar to inform you that he has been watching with much interest the proceedings of the East India Association, and that he believes that if the Association continues to work with the same sincerity and earnestness which have hitherto characterised its action, it gives great promise of proving itself useful in promoting the true interests of all the people and Princes of India.

"His Highness has, therefore, much pleasure in contributing Rs. 25,000 (twenty-five thousand) for its support; the amount to be invested, under a Trust-deed, in Government Promissory Notes, and the interest thereof, as it accrues due, to be paid to the Association as long as it lasts. His Highness has also desired me to say that if he found the Association continuing to work with benefit to India, he will be happy to render such further assistance as he thinks proper.

"His Highness wishes to take this opportunity of tendering his thanks, as a Prince and native of India, to the President, Vice-Presidents, and Members, and all other noblemen and gentlemen who have shown such warm interest in the affairs of India by their co-operation with the Association.

"His Highness feels much gratified at your own disinterested and patriotic exertions on behalf of India, and considers them very praiseworthy.

"Her Gracious Majesty having assumed the direct government of India, and in order that India may derive the full benefit of her benign rule, it is of the utmost importance that the true state of India be correctly known by the public and Parliament of England, and his Highness looks to the East India Association to become an important instrument for accomplishing this object.

"His Highness, together with the people of India, hopes that the press of England, and all noblemen and gentlemen who wish well to the British Empire, will heartily co-operate in the great cause of making the British rule in India a just and beneficent one.

"One great thing, among others, necessary for the welfare of India and the permanency of British rule, is frank, mutual confidence and earnest sympathy, and his Highness doubts not that a better knowledge in England of India's people and their wants will lead to this much-desired result.

"India, like an orphan, needs all the kindness and generous sympathy Britain can give to it, standing now in the relation of a parent.

"His Highness wishes the exertions of the Association God-speed.—I remain, yours faithfully,

Miscellaneous.

CENTRAL PROVINCES.—According to official reports made by district officers, there were about five thousand deaths caused by snake-bites within the territories subject to the control of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal during the past year.

WATER SUPPLY OF DACCA.—The estimates for supplying Dacca with pure water have been sent up to Government. The work may be put in hand in January or February, as the Lieutenant-Governor is fully sensible of the importance of carrying out the new scheme with as little delay as possible.

VACCINATION IN EASTERN BENGAL.—The Supreme Government has sanctioned the adoption of a vaccination circle in the eastern districts of Bengal at a cost of Rs. 1,052 per mensem, which will be paid out of provincial funds. Sub Assistant-Surgeon Bhoobun Mitter has been appointed superintendent of the new circle.

MEMORIAL TO LORD MAYO.—A native journal is of opinion that the subscriptions raised in the several Presidencies in order to perpetuate the memory of Lord Mayo should be deposited in banks, and the proceeds spent in assisting one or two natives from each Presidency to go up to England every year to compete for the Civil Service Examination. This is a very cool proposal.

THE TRANSPORTATION OF LIAKAT ALI.—A batch of about sixty prisoners were sent to the Andamans by the British Indian Steam Navigation Company's steamer Scotia, which left Calcutta on Oct. 8, including Liakat Ali, the Allahabad mutineer, and Bassi Muchi, who murdered his wife, and upon whom sentence of death (afterwards commuted by the Lieutenant-Governor to penal servitude) was passed in the beginning of the year.

PROTEST OF THE DARJEELING PLANTERS.—A meeting of the Darjeeling planters was held on the 5th Oct., when a memorial to the Government was drawn up, protesting against the recruiting for coolies amongst the tea gardens for the purpose of the expedition to the Garrow Hills. The planters suffered severely when a similar levy was made for the Loshai Expedition, not only by the immediate loss of labour, but by the cholera which the Loshai coolies imported into Darjeeling for the first time.

OIL-GAS.—The East Indian Railway Company is, we are told, about to adopt Colonel Money's oil gas for lighting Allahabad, and a machine for the manufacture of the gas is on its way from England. Experiments with this gas were successfully tried some years ago in Calcutta, at the Eastern Bengal Railway Station, and subsequently at Dum-Dum, but no steps were taken to introduce it in barracks and other large buildings, were it would most certainly have effected a saving. Now, however, that the East Indian Railway is about to set the example, perhaps Government may in time adopt it. The cost of the gas is estimated at one rupee four annas per thousand cubic feet, but this must, in a great measure, depend upon the supply of crushed oil seed to be obtained in the neighbourhood.—Englishman.

CHOLERA AT PESHAWAR.—Up to the night of 11th Oct., the Pioneer says, there had been in all sixty three cases of cholera in the city and cantonments of Peshawar. The disease is, however, considered by the medical men to be on the whole of a very mild type, and it is not spreading much. The jail is as yet quite free from cholera. Until lately Peshawar had maintained a quarantine against Attock and Kohat; now Kohat and Attock have established quarantine against Peshawar. In consequence of the outbreak of cholera at Peshawar, says the Friend of India, the Camp of Exercise at Hassan Abul has been postponed till the 1st of January. The deaths of troops at Peshawar from cholera up to the 14th October were fourteen Europeans and sixteen natives. On Friday there were fewer cases of cholera at Peshawar than on Thursday and there are hopes that the outbreak will not be very severe, and that the troops will be able to assemble at Hassan Abul without fail by the 1st January.

GENERAL NUTHALL.—An article some days ago appeared in the Englishman drawing attention to the marked injustice done to Major General Nuthall by the silence with which his name has been passed entirely over in connection with the Loshai Campaign. We have more than once made the same complaint, and it is very real. In no document whatever has General Nuthall's name been in the slightest degree referred to, and when the honours of the Crown are given for distinguished services no honour is given to him. We know not on whom rests the responsibility of this marked—we have no other word but—injustice, to a soldier of thirty-five years' service, who has served the Crown during all that long period without more than one very short furlough, and whose conduct was never on any single occasion brought before a court-martial. We could scarcely have imagined that the Commander-in-Chief would permit such an injustice to be done. There is something about Lord Napier that has given soldiers confidence in him. Here, however, is a case without justification, and we cannot help thinking that if the injustice is not redressed, the injury will not be General Nuthall's, but that of his Excellency.—Friend of India.

THE LATE MR. THACKER.—I have often wondered at the very little notice which is taken in the Indian papers of old residents in the East, who die in this country; for instance, said a friend of mine, there is Andrew Henderson, who made such a stir about steam and navigation in the early days of the P. and O., and even before the P. and O. had ever been heard of. At that time Andrew Henderson's name was in everybody's mouth, like Greenlaw, who was mad about steam, went off like a hair-trigger the moment he heard the word "steam." Then again, said my friend, there was Smoult, who died the other day in London, aged eighty-one. Twenty years ago no one could have gone into the Supreme Court at Calcutta without seeing Mr. Smoult get up just as if he had come out of a bandbox, the very quintessence of a gentleman well-known and liked, and always mixing with the élite of society. Now he dies, and in the place where he was best known not a single newspaper takes the trouble to write a passing paragraph about him. While on this subject I must not omit to mention the name of another well-known Anglo-Indian who has but recently passed away to his rest. Mr. Thacker is quite forgotten in India now, having, I believe, been compelled by ill-health to leave Calcutta in 1836, since which he only saw the place for a few months in 1842. From that time he worked at the London Branch of the well-known firm of Thacker and Co., and died in harness only the other day at the ripe age of eighty-two. In his early days in India, Mr. Thacker was in the old East India Company's Service as a medical man, and I believe in the year 1819 quitted that profession for bookselling, when he established the firm now so well-known as Thacker, Spink and Co. He was so much respected that from all quarters the remaining partners of his firm have received the most gratifying testimony. To quote the words of one correspondent—"he had the kindest heart, the most amiable spirit, a highly intellectual and vigorous mind with a marvellous memory, added to a charm of manner equalled only by the charming benevolence of his face. In short, Mr. Thacker realised to my mind the true and perfect English gentleman."—Correspondent of the Indian Daily News.

TIPPOO'S THRONE, &c.

In the course of our investigation we have come across the following further particulars about the throne of Tippoo, &c., &c. We have also found some mention of the mechanical tiger and of Lord Mornington's pictures:—

The tiger supporting the throne was of wood covered with plates of the purest gold about one tenth of an inch in thickness. The plates bore the tiger stripe. The stripe was the royal mark, and was emblematic of the Tippoo family, none other daring to use it on any occasion. It was imprinted even on Tippoo's jackets, turbans, and handkerchiefs, and was called bubberce.

The construction of the throne was begun about the period of Tippoo's expedition against the Nairs in 1788. A little before his march against the Rajah of Travancore, Tippoo issued orders throughout his territories that, intending to mount his throne, all persons about to be married might repair to Seringapatam, where they would have their marriage expenses defrayed by Government. Accordingly some thousands proceeded to the capital, but were so terrified by a report that the Sultan had resolved to make Mahomedans of the Hindus, that they all fled from the danger. Defeated at the Travancore lines, Tippoo dropped his intention of ascending the throne, and some years after is said to have made a vow never to use it until he recovered the provinces ceded to the English by the Treaty of Seringapatam in 1792.

The head of the tiger and a small but rich and beautiful carpet used upon the musnud on days of state were sent to England, and presented to his Majesty the King.

The bird, which was the most beautiful and magnificent ornament of the throne, was sent by the Marquis of Wellesley to the Court of Directors. It was about the size and shape of a small pigeon, and was intended to represent the huma, "the fabulous bird of antiquity, well known to all Persian scholars. Its tail was long, and its wings were in the attitude of fluttering." The huma is described as "a bird peculiar to the East. It is supposed to fly constantly and never to touch the ground, and to be a bird of happy omen." It was supposed that every head it foreshadowed would wear a crown. The word huma is said to denote a bird of paradise, a phoenix, a large royal eagle, and a pelican.

THE MECHANICAL TIGER.

This piece of mechanism represents a royal tiger in the act of devouring a prostrate European. There are some barrels, in imitation of an organ, within the body of the tiger and a row of keys of natural notes. The sounds produced by the organ are intended to resemble the cries of a person in distress intermixed with the roar of the tiger. The machinery is so contrived, that while the organ is playing, the hand of the European is often lifted up to express his helpless and deplorable condition. The whole of this design was executed by order of Tippoo, who frequently amused himself with a sight of this emblematic triumph of the Khodadad, or God-given, over the English cir-car. The article was found in a room of the palace appropriated for the reception of musical instruments, and hence called the Rajmehal. It also was sent as a present to his Majesty the King.—Madras Athenæum.

STATION TALK.

MYSORE, Oct. 4.—The weather at this town is just now very pleasant, as heavy showers of rain have lately fallen. The inhabitants are at present giving themselves to pleasure. The "Dasserah Festival" has just begun, and its commencement was announced by a salute of twenty-one guns at 8 A.M. yesterday, when his Highness Chamragandra Wudyr Bahadur sat on his Royal seat, which is called Siminasunum by the Hindus. A short description of the Palace and the throne as arranged on this occasion may prove interesting to your readers. It is customary for the Rajahs of this place to sit on the throne of the State during the ten days of the Dasserah Festival. The Maharajah has also to observe certain ceremonies peculiar to the occasion, such as tying a string on his hand, called Kunkanum, which indicates that he is not to go out of the Palace during the ten days. The Rajah has also to hold a review of his troops and to receive the respects of all classes of the people connected with the State, including his servants and relatives. Besides this, the royal elephant and horse go to the tank every day during the festival, and on these occasions a stately procession issues from the palace. The procession leaves the palace at 4 P.M. every day, and returns at 7 P.M. The Royal guard of honour and bands, which play lively airs, accompany the procession. Dancing girls dressed in gorgeous attire dance before the procession, and people flock from all parts of the province to witness the grand proceedings. While the procession is issuing forth from the palace, the Rajah sits on his throne, surrounded by the nobility and leading men of the State. On the plain in front of the palace all kinds of amusements are to be seen, such as boxing, cudgelling, bull-fighting, &c. At intervals the titles of the King are proclaimed by persons who stand on either side of the throne with golden sticks in their hands. The recital of these Parakhs, as they are called, produce a marvellous effect on the assemblage. The Balakhana where the royal seat is placed is splendidly illuminated, and a pair of candlesticks called Nanda Deepa are lighted on both sides of the musnud. The throne itself being studded with precious stones and pearls, is made resplendent by the reflection of these lights. The form of the throne is like that of a sofa, but it is somewhat higher. Attached to the throne is a magnificent golden umbrella, which has suspended to it large clusters of pearl drops. The leading men of the Court sit in rows on the floor, which is covered over with beautiful and costly carpets, and they maintain a most respectful attitude the whole time. In turns they bow their heads at the feet of the Rajah, and after they all have done so, garlands of flowers are put round their necks and betel and nuts are served. Yesterday, being the first day of the feast, the Rajah sat twice on the throne, and all the customary forms were strictly observed.—Madras Times Correspondent.

TREVANDRUM, Oct. 7.—The fall of rain here lately has been quite extraordinary; as the usual fall for September is some three or four inches. Thirty years ago eleven inches fell in all September, and this year from the 1st to the 18th September twelve inches fell! H.H. the Maharajah some time ago seriously entertained the idea of proceeding northward on a tour to Benares and other places, although this was kept dark at the time, and it was only announced that H.H., the 1st Prince, intended to travel. The whole business however ended in smoke at that time, from financial reasons, no doubt. His Highness the Maharajah, however, appears never to have definitely abandoned the project, and now it is reported that he is really to start in the beginning of next month, accompanied most likely by Mr. Ballard, the Resident, and perhaps by an officer of the Nair Brigade, Captain Gunning, now officiating here, being first favorite for the trip at present. I should hardly think it likely that H.H. the 1st Prince will accompany the Maharajah, as it may naturally be supposed that the Prince would not care particularly about proceeding as second fiddle in the Maharajah's train. It is reported that Dr. Fry the Presidency Surgeon here, at present acting in an appointment at Madras, may perhaps have to revert to his billet here owing to want of other employment if relieved of his acting appointment. This would throw out Dr. Thomas acting here. Captain T. C. Hay is expected back from the Hills very shortly. Dr. A. E. M. Ross the Durbar physician, and Mr. Barton the Engineer have been away at Courtallum, and the place has been of late most insufferably dull and cloudy. It is generally admitted that it is a matter of urgent necessity that there should now be a new assessment of land made, much land having been taken up and brought into cultivation since the last assessment, very many years ago, the State being a great loser at present, and having been a loser for many years owing to the non-receipt of taxes from these newly-cultivated lands.—Madras Times Correspondent.

THE BEGAM OF BHOPAL.—It appears that four bungalows have been engaged in Bombay for the accommodation of the Begam of Bhopal during her coming visit to Bombay to attend the grand durbar. She brings three hundred female attendants with her.

Miscellaneous.

ACCIDENT TO COLONEL RUSSELL.—Colonel Russell, the Presidency Paymaster, Madras, met with rather a severe accident on the evening of Oct. 13. While returning from his office in the Fort and about opposite the Club, the horse in his carriage seems to have bolted. The Colonel jumped out, but unfortunately fell on his head, and sustained a concussion of the brain. It is hoped that no serious injury has been done, but Colonel Russell has been severely shaken.

THE END OF THE MADURA CASE.—The Fort St. George Government Gazette contains the sequel to the great Madura case. Mr. Goldingham is removed to Nellore, while Mr. Hutchins is to act as Civil and Sessions Judge at Madura. Mr. Woodroffe is to act as Small Cause Judge at Madura, and what becomes of Mr. Snaith the Gazette sayeth not. Captain Guthrie is absent on leave, and so the Madura cabals are effectually scattered.

AN ELEPHANT KILLED BY A TIGER.—The Western Star tells us rather an extraordinary story of a tiger in the Pallapelly Hills killing a middle-sized elephant. The tiger chanced to come in contact with an elephant in one of the jungles, and it instantly bounded on the animal, gave it a severe bite on the neck, and tore its trunk into three pieces. The elephant is said to have immediately died from the effects of the wounds.

FINANCIAL.—Mr. Franklyn Lushington returns to Madras by the next steamer to take up his post of Accountant-General for one year more, by which time his period of service will have expired. It was generally thought, says the Madras Mail, that Mr. Lushington would not return to India, but the attractions of Rs. 3,000 a month, even only for a year, are not to be despised in these days of high prices. Mr. Gordon Forbes' period of service will also have expired in about a year.

DENGUE IN MADRAS.—We are glad to say that the dengue is decreasing. Not only are the numbers who are attacked smaller, but the disease itself is not so bad as it was some time back. It seems to have spent its strength. In other places however it is still very prevalent. It is travelling towards the South of the country. It is to be hoped that as the monsoon advances the dengue will retire from the field. With the exception of the dengue, the health of the Presidency is upon the whole good, and in the North plenty of rain has fallen, too much, in fact, in some places.—Madras Times, Oct. 19.

A MAN-EATING BEAR.—A wild bear has been committing some curious pranks in Ganjam. The apothecary at Chatterpore reports that seven people, all of them inhabitants of the village of Pottapuram, distant about six miles north of Chatterpore, were brought, some in carts, other on litters, to the hospital on one day. Of the seven people attacked by this ferocious animal, four of them—two men and two women—received extensive and serious injuries, the result of severe bites. From the extensive and serious nature of some of these wounds, a long time must elapse before they are well; there is besides danger to life by the liability, under the circumstances, to tetanus setting in. It appears that no less than twelve individuals were attacked and bitten by this jungle bear, which appears to have come down from the neighbouring hills and attacked the village, the animal becoming so infuriated as to charge the people into their very houses, and then seizing upon them. The bear was afterwards killed, and Government has sanctioned a reward of Rs. 20 for the destruction of the beast.

THE MYSORE STATE RAILWAY.—Rumours are afloat, says the Bangalore Herald, that the construction of the railway from Bangalore to Mysore is again on the tapis, and that Lord Northbrook is advocating its construction. This, if true, is certainly a move in the right direction. All the preliminary expenses of survey and estimating have already been defrayed. It is a fact that there is not a single engineering difficulty in accomplishing the line; and though admitted, by persons competent to express an opinion on the subject, that the construction of such a line would be extremely beneficial, considered either politically or commercially, yet it was, to the surprise and utter disappointment of an anxious local public, suddenly put a stop to by the wisdom of his Grace of Argyll, who, it seems, thinks it better to hand over a large sum to the youthful Rajah when he obtains his majority, than to give him a completed railway line, one which might be used in developing not only the commerce of his country and the intercourse of his people, but also his own intellectual and moral improvement, by affording him the opportunity of frequenting Bangalore and mixing in European society. Colonel Meade, we believe, with the best interests of the Mysore people always at heart, has ever been a staunch promoter of the object.

CROWN PATENT FUEL.—The Consulting Engineer for Railways has submitted to Government a report from the Locomotive Superintendent upon the results of certain experiments which have lately been made with a view to determine the relative merits of "crown patent fuel," as compared with coal, and with coal and coke mixed. The result of the experiments seems to prove satisfactorily the high value of the "crown patent fuel," there being a saving effected by using it of 11.84 per cent. when compared with coal, and of 10.24 per cent. when compared with coal and coke mixed in equal quantities. Mr. Barton Wright states that although the cost of the "crown patent fuel" is higher in England than that of coal, the freight charged upon it is considerably less than for coal or coke, and the landing charges being also less, its costs at Madras is not greater than that of coal, and considerably less than that of coke. Mr. Wright also states that while the deterioration of coal, when stored in India, is rapid and considerable, "crown fuel" can be kept in India for years without any perceptible deterioration taking place. The consulting engineer suggested that Mr. Wright's report be forwarded to the Government of India for the information of Indian railway companies generally.—Madras Times.

OUR ABSENT GOVERNMENT.—We hear that the Government does not return to Madras till the end of this or beginning of next month, when it will have been nearly five months absent from the seat of Government. Dislike to meet the dengue is said to have had something to do with this prolongation of the stay on the Hills, but whether the Accountant-General will consider that a good reason for passing the pay bills of gentlemen absent from their stations in this way we do not know. It is said that Lord Hobart has obtained carte blanche from the Duke of Argyll to stay wherever he likes. If this be so, we can only say that the Duke of Argyll ought to be ashamed of himself. The experience of this year shows that Government cannot do its work properly on the Hills. How long do our readers fancy it takes to get an answer to a letter sent to Government at Ootacamund? The ordinary course of post is four days, but many now find it to be about two months. Letters are sent—all kind of urgent reminders follow—but no reply can be got. In fact, to judge from what one hears said, writing to Government seems now about as satisfactory as writing to the Dead-letter Office. "I wrote about it to Government last month—no, the month before last"—you hear some official say, "but I have got no answer yet, though I have written to every one I can think of to hurry the matter on." This, it must be admitted, is not quite satisfactory.—Madras Times.

VANDALISM AT THE GRAND ARSENAL, MADRAS.—A piece of vandalism has just been perpetrated at the Grand Arsenal, Madras, of which the vandals themselves would have been ashamed. In that repository were gathered together a magnificent collection of Indian arms of various sorts, many, if indeed not most, of them being trophies gained in battle in the early days of the English in India. These specimens have often been eyed enviously by men who like to possess historical mementoes or to form collections, but the authorities have always steadily refused either to give them or sell them. A change seems to have come suddenly over the spirit of their dream, and we learn with astonishment that the whole of this fine collection of old arms, except a few specimens, have been broken up and sold as old metal! We do not know who is ultimately responsible for this deplorable freak; but if the officer now in charge of the Grand Arsenal has done this of his own accord, we cannot congratulate him on his good taste, or even on his economy. If it was desirable to clear out the Grand Arsenal, surely something better might have been done with these trophies of the past than to break them up into old metal. Many European residents would have given good prices for specimens, and Wardour-street would have welcomed the remainder. The Government would thereby have profited financially, while an outrageous bit of vandalism would have been avoided.—Madras Times, Oct. 10.

THE RED HILLS LAKE.—The most important subject of conversation during the past week has been the Red Hills Lake. In the last Summary we said that fear had been expressed about the stability of the bund of the lake. It was said that there were leaks in the bund of the tank, and that if a large quantity of rain fell it might be breached, and a large part of Madras might be destroyed. Since that time the lake has been thoroughly examined, and although it did not seem likely that a great catastrophe would happen, still it was thought necessary to make provision for letting off the surplus water. A calingula that had been constructed was lowered so as to allow the water to flow out of the lake faster. The old bund is perfectly sound, and no danger whatever is to be apprehended from it, but if the water were to rise to the level of the new or upper bund there might be an overflow, as it is questionable whether the latter would be able to stand the pressure. It is the object of those in charge of the works to keep the water from rising to the level of the new embankment. It is thought that this will be accomplished by considerably lowering the calingula, so that the water will be able to flow out as it did in former years. On the 12th and 13th of the month we had very heavy rains, fifteen and a half inches having fallen during the two days, so that the lake was pretty well tested. It is very rarely that more rain falls in the same space of time, and probably we shall not have more in any two days during the monsoon. It is not quite certain whether the rain that fell was the beginning of the monsoon, as the wind did not blow from the north-east, from which direction it ought to blow during the monsoon.—Madras Times, Oct. 17.

DR. SHORTT ON SNAKE-BITES.—The following from Dr. Shortt appears in the Madras Times:—Sir—With reference to your recent articles on snake-bite I have the honour to send you an extract from the Lancet of the 24th August, 1872, page 275, which shows the result of the much vaunted Australian treatment of liquor ammonia injected into the veins as an antidote for snake poison. In a report to Government some time ago I stated as follows:—"It further strikes me that if even the ammonia really proves so valuable a remedy, the injection of it into the veins can be undertaken by very few non-professional persons in the absence of a surgeon, as they will not possess the nerve or the skill to free a vein and introduce the nozzle of a syringe into it, and it is stated that the parts slough if the ammonia be spilt." This extract fully confirms all I have stated on the subject. I regret that some portion of the press should raise objections to experiments carried out on the lower animals, and as far as I am concerned, I am not trying to ascertain the action of snake poison on animal life. This is pretty well known now, but to test reputed antidotes which still come in, for during the last month I have received some half-a-dozen such from various quarters, as also a supply from Mr. J. F. Richardson of Jounpore, N.W.P., who objects to his antidotes being tested on animals. Under the circumstance what am I to do? If Mr. Richardson will give me the opportunity I shall be very happy to test it on himself, as he seems to have so much confidence in the remedy, and which he says "has been tested on man already." I think much good has been done by these experiments in proving to people the absurdity of depending on such worthless rubbish as the antidotes they produced when life is at stake from so potent and energetic a virus as that of snake poison, and where the life of man is concerned no "maudlin sentiment" of cruelty should be allowed to interfere, for it is no pleasure to me to destroy animal life unnecessarily, but where there is a hope, however distant or small, of finding a remedy to save even a single life, I think that I am justified in the sacrifice of animals in the cause of humanity.—I am, yours faithfully, JOHN SHORTT. Madras, Oct. 3, 1872.

FLOODS IN WESTERN INDIA.

In the Nassick Collectorate the recent flood has caused an immense amount of destruction of property and of consequent distress. Indeed, it is doubtful if any part of the country has suffered so much from that cause as certain portions of the Nassick Collectorate. The same flood that caused so much damage on the Bombay and Baroda Railway, and in Khandeish, also caused immense damage in the Nassick districts of Baglen, Malligaum, and Nandgaum, and the mischief done in these talookas arose chiefly from the rapid and extraordinary rise of the rivers Girna and Moosum. In the Malligaum talooka alone nearly one thousand houses were swept away; and, owing to the rise of the river being during the night, scarcely any of the property in them was saved by the unfortunate owners. Making all due allowance for official exaggeration, the value of house property is estimated at Rs. 1,12,000, and that of household goods destroyed at Rs. 60,500. Besides this the floods rose so high that they swept the fields on both sides of the rivers, entirely destroying the crops. The loss thus caused is estimated at Rs. 45,000. The damage caused to public roads, bridges, and buildings is estimated at Rs. 25,000. Thus the total damage in this single and by no means wealthy talooka amounted to the large sum of Rs. 2,42,500. Nearly an equal amount of damage was caused in the Bagen talooka, and a great deal of loss was also occasioned in that of Nandgaum. The loss altogether in these three poor talookas has amounted to the enormous sum of nearly five thousand lakhs of rupees. Unfortunately in these very districts last year there was an almost entire failure of crops, and the people were consequently reduced almost to beggary. The second disaster to which they have been exposed has left them altogether destitute. Many have lost not only their houses and household goods and crops, but also their cattle, and thus the means of earning a livelihood has been taken away from them. We understand that Mr. Erskine, the Collector of Nassick, has taken all the means in his power to provide Government aid, and without waiting for sanction from Government has advanced funds to meet the immediate emergency. Local subscriptions also have been opened to relieve this great distress, but these along with the Government aid which can be granted will not be sufficient to meet the emergency, and therefore the charitable public of Bombay is appealed to for aid. There are not many wealthy people in the Nassick Collectorate, nor have the people of that district been accustomed to give for public objects as have the inhabitants of Bombay, and it is obvious that the destruction of property to the amount of nearly five lakhs of rupees in three such talookas as those we have just mentioned, following upon a failure of crops last year, must plunge the inhabitants of them into a dreadful state of misery unless liberal aid be extended to them.

Regarding the late disastrous floods on the line of the B. B. and C. I. Railway, the Times of India learns that three of the principal bridges have each more or less suffered; they are the Damangunga, the Urunga Bridge, and the Par. The first of these, it says, is a stone bridge, being in the Concan district, where the river bed is rock and adverse to pile-driving. It contained eight spans, and of these six have been swept away, and the debris is lying in solid masses in the bed of the river. It is proposed to reconstruct this bridge on the same plan, with an increased elevation and stronger piers. The diversion for crossing the river is completed. One thousand feet of bridging and two thousand feet of deep cutting in connection with this diversion were performed under the supervision of Mr. G. Bailey, one of the company's engineers, in thirteen days' time. The temporary bridging materials consists of new sleepers piled four square over each other, on top of which the rails have been laid. These sleepers being of sound timber will come in again for regular use on the line. Of the Par Bridge, which consisted of twelve spans of sixty feet each, nothing remains, with the exception of about one-third of the original materials, which, when collected, will scarcely be available for future use. This is the biggest gap out even here. The diversion over the river will be completed a month from the present time. Of fourteen supports in the Urunga Bridge six have given way, leaving eight standing in mid-stream. It is estimated that the cost of repairing these and the lesser damages will amount to nearly seven lakhs; to this another lakh may be added for loss consequent on the stoppage of traffic; this will give a total of between £70,000 and £80,000, which, we learn, is the amount estimated by the railway authorities to cover the whole of the losses sustained by them. We are very glad to hear that the first anticipations as to ruinous damage are so largely reduced. The agent, traffic manager, and engineering staff deserve high commendation for the strenuous efforts they have put forth to cope with this emergency.

STATION TALK.

JACOBABAD, Sept. 28.—Affairs beyond the Bolan, though having still a gloomy appearance, are, however, more healthy than hitherto has been the case. How long will Government put up with the tricks of Khodadad Khan? He has long tried our patience, but at last Sir William Merewether ordered our Agent at Khelat not to stay in Khelat territory, but bend his way towards Jacobabad. Major Harrison intimated to the Khan about a fortnight ago that if he did not return from his evil ways he would surely leave Khelat country. The Khan did not believe that such a movement would be carried into action; but when Major Harrison did actually leave Bagwanna, and the Khan immediately dismissed his advisers, the latter called the Khandahar merchants to his court, and made good all their demands for the losses they had sustained while passing through his country. This has nearly exhausted his treasury. The Sardars have been re-instated in their rights, and all that had been promised at Jacobabad last March has been done. Settling all these claims, his next step was to overtake Major Harrison. This he did to the great surprise of the Shaggassi, who was still under the Agent's protection. The Khan informed the Agent of what he had done, and made promises of an entire submission, and was even willing to abdicate if the Sirkar liked and appoint a regency for his son. The Shaggassi or wuzzeer received an apology, and a reconciliation was immediately effected between both parties. All have now returned to Khelat, which they will again leave in a few weeks for Kozlar, a winter retreat, and there await a summons to Jacobabad to be present at the coming durbar, an invitation to which is anxiously looked for by his Highness. The Murree and Bugti tribes are quite elated at the invitation their chiefs have received, asking for their presence at Mooltan in November next. Although they are eager to see his Excellency, there are no preparations being made for his reception.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

ECCELESIASTICAL.—We learn that on the return of the Rev. G. Reynell, who is expected by the next mail, and will revert to his appointment as chaplain of Byculla, the Rev. F. L. Sharpin is to be attached temporarily to the cathedral, and during the ensuing cold weather will accompany his lordship, the Bishop, up-country on visitation tour.

THE TAXING OF COTTON.—An important meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was held on Oct. 8. The chief discussion was upon the procedure of the Legislative Council in levying a transit duty of four annas per candy upon cotton. Mr. Graham took up and repeated the arguments used by the Hon. Mr. Bythell on the motion for the second reading of the Municipal Bill, and Mr. Bickerdike followed with a speech combating the statements of the Hon. Mr. Tucker that the tax was infinitesimal, and pointing out that, though the supply of Indian cotton did not affect the English market, yet the tax upon it would greatly affect the Indian trade, which, to have any chance with the American growth, must sell at the lowest possible rate. Mr. Kittredge and Mr. Macalister took up the same position, and added, that since Bombay is to be allowed to tax cotton in transit through it, there was no reason why every little Mofussil municipality should not also lay a contribution upon cotton passing on its way to Bombay for shipment. The Chamber resolved to memorialise the Governor of Bombay in Council, and, if necessary, the Viceroy, to withhold sanction from the Bill until the obnoxious provision relating to the tax on cotton were expunged.

A FIGHT WITH PIRATES.—The Bremen barque Coriolan, which left Bombay in February last, had, it appears, an adventurous voyage to the China seas. One night when sailing along under a fair wind, three piratical-looking craft were seen making towards the Coriolan, and next morning, the wind dying away, all doubts were removed by the foremost of the boats coming up to the barque and opening fire. There were no fire-arms on board the barque except the captain's revolver, so the crew were armed with ship's hatchets; the captain, for the sake of defence, smearing the decks with tar, and strewing broken glass upon it. As soon as the first boat of Malays boarded, the fight began, and, thanks to the glass on the decks, the pirates got considerably the worst of the contest; but the second boat soon came alongside, and though the crew of the barque fought most desperately, they were being gradually driven into a corner of their vessel. But at this critical moment a Deus ex machina appeared in the shape of a British gun-boat, which, with a shot or two, sank the third boat which was making for the barque, and coming on ran down the second, which was floating near. The other boat made off with such of the pirate crew as had been left in it, but a shot sent it to the bottom. The boats of the gun-boat were then lowered and chase given to such of the pirates as were trying to escape by throwing themselves into the sea from the barque, and all were satisfactorily accounted for. Indeed, it would appear that all the three pirate craft, with every one of their crew, were destroyed. Fifty were killed in fight, ten hung after capture, and the remainder either drowned or shot when swimming or pulled down by sharks. Among the crew of the Coriolan nine lives were lost, all the rest being more or less severely wounded.—Pioneer.

THE COTTON CROPS.—The Bombay Cotton Commissioner's latest report speaks very favourably of the crop. In Guzerat the weather has been fine, heavy dews at night, and the cotton plant is healthy. There is no variation in these favourable reports from Surat, Broach, Kaira, Ahmadabad, Veerungaum, and Dholera. In other crops the reaping of bajree had begun, and the cultivators are well satisfied with the general prospects of the season. From Khandeish and the Deccan the accounts are up to the 14th Oct., and they report the cotton crop in good condition. In some of the eastern talookas the excessive rain following the drought had retarded the crop, but it is now recovering itself with the dry weather. In the Poona collectorate the cotton crop is satisfactory. From the Sholapore collectorate the same report comes. From the Superintendent of the experimental farm in Khandeish the reports are also very favourable. The gram and other crops also promise to yield an abundant harvest. In the Southern Mahratta Country the favourable weather still continues, and all crops are making excellent progress. The plants are somewhat behind in these parts, and it is noticed that jowaree has become in many parts of the Southern Mahratta Country, especially in large cotton tracts of Belgaum and Kulladgee zillahs, a serious rival to cotton, where the grain crop was last season an almost complete failure. Grain is selling at high rates, and the ryots have naturally planted more jowaree (the principal bread staple) than usual. A little cotton has gone forward from Vingorla and Coompta, but it is principally of stuff stored there for the rains. In the Hooblee talooka, of the Dharwar collectorate, the cotton crop has made but slight progress, owing to the cold and damp. The returns of the quantity of acres under cotton cultivation in that district show 3,026 acres this year, against 3,823 acres last year under cotton cultivation. In Sind nothing of importance has occurred with reference to the cotton crop. Locusts have damaged the juar and bajree crops, but not the cotton plant. New cotton will not make its appearance at Kurrachee before the beginning of December next. On the Government experimental farm in Sind, the picking of cotton has begun. The first-sown American is ready for second picking, but the people cannot be got at present to secure it. The canals are getting dry, and the cotton crop will suffer a little in consequence.

WORKING OF THE MONEY ORDER SYSTEM IN INDIA.

The following letter from the Government of India is published:—

Government of India.—Financial Department.—Accounts.

To the Comptroller General.

Simla, Sept. 30.

Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your report, dated Sept. 2, on the working of the money order system in India for the year ending March 31.

In reply, I am directed to communicate the following observations and orders:—

3. The number of offices opened at the end of 1871-72 was 355, being 26 more than the number open at the end of 1870-71; 8,511 more orders were issued, and 9,573 more orders were paid in 1871-72 than in 1870-71, but the amount received decreased from £1,305,592 to £1,251,412, or by £54,180, and the amount paid fell off from £1,299,762 to £1,255,749, or by £44,013.

4. For the first time in the history of the department the amount paid has exceeded the amount received; but the excess was trifling (£4,337), and the amount received since the beginning of the system (£6,214,146) exceeds the amount paid (£6,166,756) by £47,390. It is much to be regretted that you are still unable to submit a correct statement of outstanding orders. Every effort must be made to discover and remove the causes of the differences in this matter between the books of the money order department and the general books of the empire.

5. The total charges of the department to date are not stated. In future columns should be added to the statement in paragraph 23, showing the charges debited in each year, and the net profit of each year.

6. Meanwhile, it is noted that the profits of 1871-72 (£6,618) are less than the profits of 1871 (£7,233) by £615. The falling off of business which has led to this decrease of profit occurred almost entirely in Lower Bengal, and is attributed, in paragraphs 27 and 35 of your report, to the extended facilities given for the use of currency notes for purposes of remittance.

7. In the concluding part of your report you refer to two matters which have frequently attracted attention in the working of the department:—

First.—The frequent instances of fraud and defalcation, and Second.—The very common complaint of the insufficiency of the remuneration allowed to the agents.

8. It is probably true, as suggested by you, that there would be little room for fraud if the proceedings of the agents were constantly and carefully supervised; but experience shows that, perhaps, owing to the multiplicity of the more important duties of collectors, such supervision cannot, in practice, be secured.

9. You are of opinion that no complaints of the insufficiency of the remuneration of agents would have arisen if the Government had, in the first instance, simply required the collectors' establishments to conduct the duties of the department without additional pay.

10. Approving of the suggestions contained in paragraphs 45 to 47 of your report, the Gov. gen. in Council is pleased to decide that the office of Money Order Agent shall be abolished, and that the issue and payment of money orders, except at the Presidency towns, shall henceforth be a part of the duties of the Treasury establishment. Should this cause too great an addition to the work of any treasury, assistance will be given to it. You are authorised to issue the necessary orders for carrying out the change of system.

11. The offices where the amount of business transacted is inconsiderable may, as suggested by you, be closed.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant, (Signed) D. BARBOUR, Officiating Under Secretary to the Government of India.

THE AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.—MEETING AT THE MANSION HOUSE.

A public meeting was held on Monday, in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, with respect to the evils of the existing Slave Trade in Africa. The spacious hall was crowded to excess, and a great number of persons found it impossible to obtain admittance. Among those present were the Baroness Burdett Coutts, the Lord Bishop of London, the Earl of Harrowby, the Bishop of Winchester, Sir Bartle Frere, K.C.B., Mr. H. M. Stanley, the discoverer of Dr. Livingstone; the Lady Mayoress, the Rev. Dr. Moffatt, the Rev. Horace Waller, Vicar of Leytonstone, formerly travelling companion to Dr. Livingstone, Mr. A. Kinnaird, M.P., &c.

The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, said they were aware that he held very early in his mayoralty a meeting which had for its object the drawing the attention of the Government to the slave trade in Eastern Africa. He was much pleased to find that from the expression of feeling which had been given on that occasion the Government had taken up the question, and he felt assured that they had placed in the hands of a very distinguished man the opportunity of fully and completely settling that question. No one would doubt for a moment that Sir Bartle Frere was the fittest man to do this. (Loud cheers.) He went forth with Eastern experiences and with the kindest feelings, and he was sure if it was possible to make terms he would do so advantageously. (Cheers.) He then referred, in terms of condemnation, to the treaty with the Sultan of Zanzibar, and concluded by reading letters of apology from Lord Shaftesbury, Sir Stafford Northcote, and others.

The Bishop of Winchester moved the first resolution as follows:—"That the same imperative duty which rested on Great Britain to suppress the West African slave trade binds her to the suppression of that from the East Coast." He could see in the crowding of that great hall, in the interest in every countenance, the old fever had broken out again, the blessed fever which swept away in the time of our fathers the cursed thing from the West Coast, and which now, he trusted, would do the same thing on the East Coast. He then drew, in forcible and touching language, the horrors of the slave trade in Africa, and said Great Britain was just as directly bound in the sight of God and man to remedy the evil in the East as she ever had been in the West. (Cheers.) She had, in the face of the world, and in the name of God, undertaken this championship; she has declared that slave trading is piracy, and that it shall not exist upon the high seas, and she was bound to carry the principle out. (Loud cheers.)

His Lordship having spoken about three-quarters of an hour, was here interrupted by cries of "Time." Upon order being restored, his Lordship said he should be but a few minutes longer, but, if interrupted, he should speak till midnight. (Laughter.) He concluded with an earnest and strong appeal to the meeting to support the movement.

Mr. D. Kirkman Hodgson, M.P., briefly seconded the resolution, which was put to the meeting and carried.

The Chairman then introduced

Mr. H. M. Stanley to the meeting. Upon rising, Mr. Stanley was greeted with enthusiastic cheering, which continued uninterruptedly for several minutes. In response to a general cry, Mr. Stanley mounted a chair, and the cheering was redoubled. On silence being restored, Mr. Stanley said: I shall never be able to speak from such a platform as this, so, with your permission, I will descend to the level of ordinary mortals. (Laughter.) He then said he had been requested to move the following resolution:—"That all who desire to promote the abolition of this trade should make its enormities as widely known as possible." It was for that purpose he was there. He was only sorry he was not gifted with such eloquence as his right rev. friend the Lord Bishop of Winchester, as he then, perhaps, should do justice to the theme; but, in the absence of that, they must take the words of a wanderer, who would try and do the subject the justice which it deserved. (Cheers.) The enormities of the slave trade—Livingstone took them for his text letter after letter. Why? The Litany of the slave had not resounded in the ears of Christian nations as it had resounded through that hall. (Cheers.) David Livingstone had brought the theme and sounded the complaint before them over and over again, and this time, when he was supposed to have been lost in the dark and fabulous region, he commissioned him (Mr. Stanley) to carry his complaint to them. This he had done. He had now to tell them what he had seen personally of the slave trade. He would not attempt any grand sentimental pictures, for fear he might be dubbed that adjective which a gentleman and a Christian endowed him at Brighton, but in clear and simple English words he would address them. They must, first of all, imagine themselves at Zanzibar, in which town there were some 17,000 Banians, all exceedingly wealthy—in fact, they had all the money. There are also Arabs there. Now these Banians love their ease, being opulent, and whenever they want to make a venture, they make advances to the Arabs, and for the advance made they got as much as 100 per cent. on every dollar advanced. The Arabs take their caravans and start off on an expedition to procure slaves, taking with them some 3,000 dollars worth of cloth, beads, &c. Upon arriving at Unyanyembe the slaves are found too dear to be bought, and this is also the case at Ujiji. Farther in the country, however, the slaves were to be got for nothing, with a little cunning. They found that 80 or 100 guns were quite sufficient to conquer any of the small tribes who were found round about Manyemba. He had seen many of the natives brought in from that place, and he could add his testimony to that of Livingstone regarding the beauty of those natives. While pretending to sell the beads, &c., to the natives of this part, who are extremely fond of changing and bartering, the leader of this ruffianly gang is placing his men ready, and all on a sudden commences a fusillade. The poor natives, startled at the tremendous sounds, which they believed to be borrowed from Heaven, rushed in one particular instance into the water of a river near, when they were eaten by the crocodiles, and when they showed their heads to implore for mercy it was the signal for a bullet. It was no wonder that Dr. Livingstone's anger was kindled. He himself had seen his eye flashing as he described the horrors of these things. If he had gone to Africa fifty years ago he should have seen from Zanzibar to Ujiji the natives regarding with curiosity the people from the sea. In the course of barter, however, the Arabs were unfortunate enough to sell muskets and guns to the tribes. What was the consequence to-day? We saw the tribes standing up one against another for their "rights." The natives had been taught the use of the gun, and they turned the guns against the Arabs themselves. The question might well be asked, Why was the slave trade question not settled? Constitutional scruples, they were told, prevented the Foreign minister from dealing with the slave trade of the East Coast of Africa in the vigorous manner it ought to be dealt with. The justice to suffering humanity called upon them to advocate its immediate abolition by constitutional means if they could—by unconstitutional means if necessary. The civilised nations of Europe had over and over again expressed their abhorrence of its continuance, and there would not be one dissentient voice among them to its abolition. (Cheers.) He had to congratulate the English Government upon the appointment of Sir Bartle Frere as Commissioner to see what could be done at Zanzibar. He thought that there were very few people in England who could do so well at Zanzibar as Sir Bartle Frere. He would advise him to pay a visit also to Seychelles, and he would find that the English Government had been selling slaves and taking the money for them. If that was not compounding with villainy, he did not know what was. He had promised Livingstone he would publicly state that, and if he found it was wrong he would as publicly retract it. (A voice: "I hope you will.") He concluded by formally moving the resolution.

Bishop Cloughton seconded the resolution, which was carried.

The Earl of Harrowby then moved, and Mr. A. J. Otway, M.P., seconded, "That this meeting pledges itself to promote, by all constitutional means, the abolition of the East African Slave Trade, and rejoices in the recent appointment by the Government of the special mission which has for its end this great object."

This was carried, and Sir Bartle Frere, addressing the meeting, congratulated the Chairman upon the result of the present meeting. With regard to the Governments of the past, and the engagements which were now to be revived, he thought no blame was to be attached to the parties who drew up the previous treaties, as they thought they were doing as much as they possibly could. He courted criticism on his expedition, and trusted he should be kept up to do the best with the means placed at his disposal. (Loud cheers.)

Bishop Ryan, in moving a resolution promoting a petition to Parliament, and that a copy of the resolutions be sent to the Government, took occasion to contradict in all good fellowship Mr. Stanley's statement about the slavery being carried on at Seychelles, which he could state, from his experience with the Mauritius, was not the case. (Loud cheers.)

The Rev. Horace Waller, a former companion of Dr. Livingstone, seconded the resolution, which was also carried.

Lord Lawrence, in proposing a vote of thanks to the Lord Mayor for his earnest sympathy with the object of the meeting and for presiding on that occasion, said he felt sure that if they were determined to put down the slave trade it would be done. (Hear, hear.) He did not say it was easy, but he was convinced that what the British Government determined upon could be done, and no better man could have been selected for so important a mission as that which had been confided to Sir Bartle Frere. They must not rest under the impression that the work would be finished when they had concluded a treaty with the Sultan of Zanzibar, for after that they would have to see that it was properly carried out, and their difficulties would only have commenced. (Hear, hear.)

Dr. Moffatt, who was most warmly received, seconded the motion, and expressed his great gratification at being present at such a meeting. He had been labouring in the interior of Africa for thirty-five years, and therefore they could well understand that that country lay very near his heart, and that everything that had reference to it was especially interesting to him. He eulogised the self-denying exertions of his son-in-law, Dr. Livingstone, and said that he fervently hoped that the horrors of the slave trade would soon be a thing of the past. (Cheers.)

The Lord Mayor briefly acknowledged the vote of thanks, and the proceedings were brought to a close.

Miscellaneous.

APPOINTMENT.—Tuesday night's Gazette announces that the Queen has been pleased to appoint Mr. Robert Staunton Ellis, C.B., of the Madras Civil Service, to be a Member of Council at the Presidency of Fort St. George, in the East Indies, vice Mr. Alexander John Arbuthnot, C.S.I.

MAJOR-GENERAL JOHN HENNESSEY.—This officer, late of the Bengal Army, has just died, aged sixty-five. He obtained his first commission in the Bengal Infantry in February, 1828, obtained his appointment in the Staff Corps in December, 1866, and until just before his retirement was employed at Meerut. The late major-general served as a volunteer with her Majesty's 59th Foot at the siege and capture of Bhurtপুর in 1825-26, for which he received the Indian medal; also with the army of Gwalior at the battle of Mahrajpur.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £650,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 6th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £565,000; to Bombay, £75,000; and to Madras, £9,700. The minimum price was fixed, as before, at 1s. 10½d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 10½d. will receive about 44 per cent., above that price in full. On Bombay at 1s. 10½d. in full. The average rate on Calcutta was 1s. 10¾d., on Bombay 1s. 10¾d., and on Madras 1s. 10¾d.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—So short of subalterns are the Home Garrison Brigades of Royal Artillery that the officers of the brigades which were broken up in India, who are on leave of absence in this country, have had their leave cancelled and have been ordered to join the brigades to which they have been respectively appointed without delay. The adoption of this course has naturally caused some disappointment; but until the whole of the officers employed away from their batteries shall have been made supernumerary, there is no help for it. The delay, however, in carrying out the seconding process is extremely unfortunate.

A HARD CASE.—The results of the recent examinations for admission into the Staff College are the subject of remark by a writer in the Times, who signs himself "Armed Science." He observes that out of thirty-two officers who qualified the names of thirteen belong to the Ordnance Corps, and occur in the following order of merit:—1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 15, 24. Of these thirteen gentlemen, however, only five have been recommended for admission, "there being no further vacancies for Royal Artillery or Royal Engineers." Thus an Engineer officer who passed third on the list, with a total of 2,468 marks, is set aside in favour of a cavalry officer who comes twenty-ninth on the list, with 1,499 marks. We may well ask, in these circumstances, if the army is to be an open profession or not, and if the education received at the Staff College is or is not considered of any real importance by the responsible authorities?—Broad Arrow.

THE NEW MEMBER FOR TIVERTON.—The Right Hon. William Massey, who was on Monday returned to Parliament in the Liberal interest as M.P. for Tiverton, was born in the year 1809, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in Hilary Term, 1844. For some years he went the Western Circuit, and was appointed Recorder of Portsmouth in 1852. He entered Parliament in the same year as one of the members for Newport, in the Isle of Wight, which constituency he represented down to 1857. During the greater part of this period he acted as Under Secretary of State for the Home Department. He sat for the borough of Salford from the last-named date down to the year 1865, during a portion of which time he was actively employed as Chairman of Committees of the Whole House. He was sent out to India in 1865 as Minister of Finance and a member of the Governor-General's Council, at the same time being sworn a member of her Majesty's Privy Council. Mr. Massey, who is the author of Common Sense, versus Common Law, and also of a History of England under the Reign of George III., married in 1833 Frances Carleton, daughter of the Rev. John Orde, but was left a widower a few months since.

KHAJAH HUBERBOOLLAH KHAN AND OTHERS V. KHAJAH GOUHAR ALI KHAN.—This was an appeal from the Presidency of Bengal, preferred in a suit remanded to India by an order of her Majesty in Council, approving and giving effect to a judgment of the Judicial Committee delivered on the 19th of July, 1863. The question on which the result of the suit, originally instituted in 1852, depended, was as to the legitimacy of the respondent, who claimed to be the son of the marriage of one Abdool Kadir, alias Wurzeer. The present appeal was from a decree of the High Court of Calcutta given on the 16th of January, 1865, and raised a question on the Mahomedan law. Mr. Cowie and Mr. Doyne appeared for the appellants; Mr. Leith, Q.C., and Mr. Mazundar for the respondent. After Mr. Cowie and Mr. Doyne had addressed the Court, their Lordships conferred in private. Sir J. Colville gave judgment, and, after recapitulating the principal facts, said their Lordships were of opinion that the only decision the High Court could have arrived at was that the son was legitimate, and therefore their Lordships would not disturb that finding. Their Lordships would therefore humbly advise her Majesty that the present appeal be dismissed with costs. The decision affirms the legitimacy of the respondent.

SREE NARAYAN MITTRO V. SREEMUTTY KISHAN SOONDREE DOSSER.—This case, which was opened on Tuesday, was resumed and concluded. There has been considerable litigation on a question of adoption under the Hindoo law. There had been two decisions in the Court below, and also a special appeal. The principal question was whether the respondent, the widow of Dwenkamuth Ghose, and a person of considerable property, had adopted one of the sons of the appellant, who was her maternal uncle, to perform the religious and social rites of the deceased. She had made two deeds in reference to the adoption of the child, and afterwards, on the alleged non-adoption, brought a suit to get the instruments declared null and void. The father of the child, the present appellant, defended the suit on the ground that sufficient had been done to render the adoption legal. Two Courts held that the adoption was not complete, and found in favour of the widow. On a special appeal the decrees of the other Courts were confirmed. The father of the child then appealed as guardian to her Majesty in Council, and the question of adoption under the Hindoo law was fully argued by Mr. Cowie and Mr. J. D. Bell for the appellant, and by Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., and Mr. Doyne for the widow. Their lordships consulted for some time, and on the re-admission of the public it was announced by Sir Barnes Peacock that the judgment would be considered.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.—Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, accompanied by their two eldest children, Prince Albert Victor and Prince George, and by the Earl of Leicester, the Marquis of Ripon, the Duke of St. Albans, Lord Dacre, Lord Suffield, and the Hon. R. Melville, and attended by Lady E. Kingscote, Lieutenant-Colonel A. Ellis, and the Rev. J. N. Dalton, arrived from London on Monday afternoon, at Elvedon Hall, on a visit to the Maharajah Duleep Singh. On Tuesday the shooting party were in the field by ten o'clock, and in addition to the 5,200 acres which the Maharajah purchased nine years ago, the visitors had something like 7,000 acres on which to sport, inasmuch as nearly all the parish of Icklingham has also been purchased by the Maharajah. Elvedon is about three miles and a half from Thetford, five miles south of Brandon, fifteen from Newmarket, and ten from Bury St. Edmund's. The property is considered one of the best for shooting purposes in Norfolk or any other county. On Thursday the Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Maharajah Duleep Singh, the Duke of St. Albans, the Earl of Leicester, Earl de Grey, Lords Ducie, Dacres, and Suffield, Colonel Teesdale, and the Hon. R. Melville, was out shooting for the last day of the present visit in the beats contiguous to Elvedon Hall. The royal party have on each of the three days had some capital sport. The Princess of Wales, with the Maharanee and other ladies of the party, went out for a carriage drive. The party broke up on the 8th inst.

MEETING AT THE MANSION-HOUSE.

The Echo observes that for more than the average years of a generation England has made war for an idea—the grandest, the purest idea that can swell the human heart—the idea of the freedom of mankind. We have made war against the inhuman doctrine that “man can hold property in man,” and the record of the meeting at the Mansion-house yesterday is an emphatic reassertion of this policy. We have been bold enough for years past to treat the shipment of slaves as an act of war against our notion of human right, and, one after another, we have been joined by the great Powers of the world, until it is nearly with one consent that this horrid trade is attacked in any of its haunts. Of these the chief is the island and port of Zanzibar, towards which Sir Bartle Frere's special mission is directed. We feel it necessary only to allude to one circumstance connected with this most righteous expedition, and that is the proposal that England, or perhaps the Indian Government, should relieve the Sultan of Zanzibar of the payment, amounting to £8,000 a-year, which he makes to the Imaun of Muscat. It seems that in adjusting a dispute between these rulers we arranged, if we did not impose, this tribute, and it appears not unlikely that Sir Bartle Frere is to purchase from the Sultan an edict, for the extinction of the Slave Trade at Zanzibar by offering, on the part of England or India, to bear this payment for the future. We venture to think that this proposition will justly cause much dissatisfaction, and yet it is one which should be very carefully viewed in all its bearings before objection is taken. No doubt England would be justified by the laws of humanity in demanding from the Sultan the cessation of this traffic, and in taking warlike steps to prevent it. The Sultan might be told that the trade must cease, and ships could be placed to secure its cessation, and to protect the Sultan if he incurred danger in carrying out the mandate. This was the course which Bishop Wilberforce and Mr. Stanley commended on Monday. And it is the course most consonant with our feelings. But a responsible Government which, in spite of Mr. Bright, does not think itself unfit to rule the country, although it has failed to reduce expenditure beneath £70,000,000, will perhaps be of opinion that the right of interference is not dearly bought by a promise to pay £8,000 a-year. And they will probably take the view that the alternative recommended by Mr. Stanley might prove a disturbing precedent. We are, indeed, rather curious to know what will be said in the United States concerning the meeting of last Monday. If Great Britain were to do as Mr. Stanley recommends at Zanzibar, why should not President Grant do the same with regard to Cuba and Porto Rico, where it is known that slavery is not yet dead. Diplomats who, above all “burning questions” of right, regard political “rows” as to be avoided, may rejoice that we shall afford no precedent for such action if we pay the £8,000 a-year; but for our part we should not regard such license as a bar to our putting what Dr. Wilberforce calls “the hand of a little obliging necessity” upon the ruler of Zanzibar.

AND OTHER POEMS.

Bengal Civil Service.

"Mr. Kelly is a writer whose poems are poems. Delhi, the chief poem, is remarkable as showing that its Author can write good heroic verse; and others in the volume show an equal command over blank verse, lyric metres, and even ballad measures, as witness, for the last, a capital piece on Marathon."—Graphic.

"The World's Martyrs," a long poem written in quatrains, shows much command of language; and another upon Dante, in the same metre, is equally praiseworthy."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"His volume is remarkable alike for high aims and facile accomplishment."—Court Circular.

"The volume contains much graceful and excellent verse, and proves that Mr. Kelly is a writer of high culture."—Civil Service Gazette.

"Mr. Kelly's sonnets on the events of contemporary history are very good."—Illustrated London News.

"It seems to us that the Author enjoyed in India many conditions of climate and country highly favourable to a successful cultivation of the muse, and the surpassing beauty of many passages in these poems, descriptive of Indian scenery and legends, goes far to support our view. The principal poem is on Delhi, in which we have given us a vivid picture of the growth of the old Mogul Empire, and of the recent mutiny."—Standard.

"Mr. Kelly assuredly may claim to have no inconsiderable share of the poetic gifts. . . . Contains more real poetry than nine out of ten more pretentious volumes with which the soul of the critic is afflicted."—Orchestra.

THE HISTORY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE IN INDIA.

FROM THE
APPOINTMENT OF LORD HARDINGE
TO THE
POLITICAL EXTINCTION OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY.

BY
LIONEL JAMES TROTTER,

Late of the 2nd Bengal Fusiliers.

The first volume of this History embraces the period from Lord Hardinge's appointment in 1844 to the retirement of the Marquis of Dalhousie in 1856.

The second volume commences with the arrival of Lord Canning in India in 1856, and closes with his lordship's death in 1862. This being the most eventful period in the annals of the East India Company, including the Mutiny, great pains have been taken in its narration.

"Captain Trotter has done good service in providing the public with a sequel to a standard work. . . . And in every way his performance is worthy to take rank with that of his predecessor. . . . The thoroughly satisfactory manner in which the task has been performed is greatly to the author's credit. . . . We take our leave of the work, congratulating its author upon having produced an addition to the 'History of India' at once permanent in purpose and popular in execution; acceptable in every way to the wants of the public, and especially adapted for the enlightenment of young members of the local service, to whom the modern annals of the country which they help to administer are of far more importance than the history of remote periods having little or no relation to the present day."—Standard.

"Both the plan and execution of the work are deserving of high praise. Full of interest and animation, and narrates with clearness and brevity all that took place during the period of which it treats. . . . The second volume of Mr. Trotter's history possesses the same merits by which the first was distinguished. It is written with great animation, and often with considerable graphic power. It tells its story with perspicuity and without needless or tiresome digressions. It avoids as far as possible that controversial vein into which Indian politicians and historians are alike prone to fall, and it is as impartial as any work is likely to be which deals with times so near our own. . . . The narrative of the spirit-stirring events of the mutiny will of course have the greatest attraction for most readers, and it is in truth the best, as it is the principal part of the present volume. . . . It appears to us that Mr. Trotter has been eminently successful in his treatment of a very exciting and interesting period of recent history."—London Review.

"The volume is full of interesting matter, comprising every event of importance during the exciting period of the rebellion, told in a concise, straightforward, and impartial manner, unnumbered by those copious extracts from documentary evidence which often serve no other purpose than increasing the bulk without adding to the usefulness of a work of this description."—Observer.

"Captain Trotter's reflections are few. . . . He has his own views, though he does not force them upon us in detail. . . . All this proves him to be far above the narrowness of the average Anglo-Indian. He speaks out boldly, too, in defence of Lord Gough. . . . A word as to our author's descriptive powers; they are such as his lighter writings would lead us to expect. . . . Whatever he has to tell Captain Trotter tells it in an animated and picturesque style. The night on the field at Ferozeshahur . . . is admirably painted; so is the grand success of Goojrat. The disarming of the veterans of the Khalsa . . . is a striking scene. Captain Trotter's book opens up many other interesting questions; it is full of notices of social changes; it points out the specially unfortunate way in which the annexation of Oudh was managed."—Fortnightly Review.

"Here we have before us the first volume of an eminently readable history. . . . The arrangement of the matter, the style, and, above all, the spirit which pervades his pages, are worthy of great commendation. Mr. Trotter is singularly free from the faults of a partisan writer. . . . The volume concludes with a masterly criticism on Lord Dalhousie's character and services."—Calcutta Englishman.

"We cannot say that he has dealt unjustly by Lord Canning's memory. . . . A well-considered volume, in which the heartiest acknowledgments are paid to Lord Canning for his temperate wisdom at a time when there was no man more abused than he. . . . He writes thoughtfully, yet with a soldier's sense of the stir of a brisk military narrative. His history of this great struggle is full and impartial. . . . We need not follow him through his vigorous rehearsal of the well-known incidents. It forms a very lucid history, the several parts being well planned and well grouped, and no important point being omitted or misrepresented."—Examiner.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

FLATULENCY, NAUSEA, INDIGESTION.—Nothing depresses the mind more rapidly or wears out the body much faster than a stomach incapable of fully digesting its food. Indigestion renders life so miserable that from it spring most of the suicides which daily shock our nerves. If Holloway's Pills be regularly taken for a time, and his Ointment be twice daily rubbed over the digestive organs, these melancholy symptoms will soon cease, and pleasurable thoughts succeed the dismal forebodings engendered by dyspepsia, and which drive the sufferer to misery and despair. Holloway's priceless preparations, by briskly acting on the liver and other internal organs, have long stood prominently forward for the wonderful cures they have effected.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S (Ex. Army Med. Staff)
CHLORODYNE

IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood stated that Dr. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the Inventor of CHLORODYNE: that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, being the Inventor was deliberately untrue, which he regretted had been sworn to. Eminent Hospital Physicians of London stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they prescribe it largely, and mean no other than Dr. Browne's.—See Times, July 12, 1864.

The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.Remedial Uses and Action.

This INVALUABLE REMEDY produces quiet, refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions, and stimulates healthy action of the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium. Old and young may take it at all hours and times when requisite. Thousands of persons testify to its marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while medical men extol its virtues most extensively, using it in great quantities in the following diseases:—

Diseases in which it is found eminently useful—Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Colics, Coughs, Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Whooping Cough, Cramp, Hysteria, &c.

*Extracts from Medical Opinions.*The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Chlorodyne.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

From A. Montgomery, Esq., late Inspector of Hospitals, Bombay.—“Chlorodyne is a most valuable remedy in Neuralgia, Asthma, and Dysentery. To it I fairly owe my restoration to health, after eighteen months' severe suffering, and when other remedies had failed.”

Dr. Lowe, Medical Missionary in India, reports (Dec. 1865) that in nearly every case of Cholera in which Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne was administered the patient recovered.

Extract from Medical Times, Jan. 12, 1866.—“Chlorodyne is prescribed by scores of orthodox medical practitioners. Of course it would not thus be singularly popular did it not supply a want and fill a place.”

Extract from the General Board of Health, London, as to its efficacy in Cholera.—“So strongly are we convinced of the immense value of this remedy, that we cannot too forcibly urge the necessity of adopting it in all cases.”

Beware of spurious and dangerous compounds sold as CHLORODYNE, from which frequent fatal results have followed.

See leading article, Pharmaceutical Journal, Aug. 1, 1869, which states that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the Inventor of Chlorodyne; that it is always right to use his preparation when Chlorodyne is ordered.CAUTION.—None genuine without the words “Dr. J. Collis Browne” on the Government stamp. Overwhelming medical testimony accompanies each bottle.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail, are—from Bombay, October 28; Agra and Madras, October 26; Calcutta, October 25.

THE Indian papers give detailed accounts of the Viceroy's visits to Lahore and Firozpur. On the way to Lahore his Lordship halted at Amritsar, to inspect the Fort, School, and Cantonments. Lahore itself was reached at midnight of the 19th October. At the railway station the Viceroy was met next morning by the Lieutenant-Governor and a pretty large muster of officers civil and military, while troops native and European, besides some mounted volunteers, accompanied his carriage on his drive round the city. The Rajahs of Kapurthalla and Faridkot paid their respects to him in the afternoon at his camp near the Multan Road. A subsequent visit to Anarkalli and the chief buildings there was followed in the evening by a drive to Shalimar. On the following afternoon his Lordship drove to Mianmir. Monday the 21st saw him driving across the Ravi to Jahangir's Tomb at Shahdera, and the State Railway workshops in the adjoining Serai. A levée at Government House was followed by a Viceregal Darbâr at midday, when Khilats were presented to the two Rajahs and several Sirdars and Nawabs. The same afternoon his Lordship drove off to Firozpur, a day's halt at which place was followed by his return to Lahore on the 23rd. Thence he started the same night by train to Multan, where he was duly welcomed the next morning by the officers of the Station and a good many Native chiefs and Sirdars. On his way down the river in a barge specially fitted up for him, the Viceroy was to visit the Arsenal at Haidarabad, and the tombs of the Talpur Amirs at Kotri. On the 26th his Lordship started from Multan on his ride to Jacobabad.

ON the 18th October Lord Napier inspected the troops in garrison at Ambála, and expressed himself as pleased with their appearance and discipline. On the next day he also started for Lahore.

THE cholera at Peshawar is reported to have been of a very virulent type. In ten days from its first outbreak on the 7th

October 275 seizures had occurred, of which 148 proved fatal. On the 18th twenty-three fresh cases were reported in the city, of which thirteen ended fatally. Of twelve cases at that time in cantonments, eight were fatal, including four English soldiers, a woman, and a child. On the 19th no fewer than twenty-four died out of twenty-seven attacked in the city, while five Europeans and one native died in cantonments out of nine attacked in all. Altogether down to the 20th two hundred deaths of all classes had occurred out of 346 seizures. The 55th Foot suffered heavily, especially in women and children, before their removal into camp. The artillerymen were first attacked on the 18th, and have since been moved out. The 15th Sikhs and the 16th Bengal Cavalry had suffered less. Since the dust-storm of the 18th the cholera was said to be abating, but fever was very prevalent by latest accounts.

ANOTHER alarm of the old kind seems to have sprung up in the Central Provinces. If the Madras Times has heard aright, the civil powers in those parts have been sending round private notices to officers commanding Madras regiments there stationed, to the effect that secret meetings were being held by their men, so at least it was reported by the police, and that the officers in question had better be on the alert. We are further told that the whole correspondence has been forwarded to Lord Napier, and that "one brigadier at least attaches no importance to the warnings." Let us hope that our contemporary has not heard aright.

SINDIA having made up his mind to meet the Viceroy at Bombay, his rival Holkar, as a matter of course, could only consent to go through the same ceremony somewhere else. His Highness's dignity will therefore be saved, it appears, by his meeting the Viceroy at Barwai on the Narbadda. The Rajah of Travancore on the other hand has been so anxious to meet the Viceroy that he had arranged to leave Trevandrum on the 8th of this month, on his journey to Bombay. From thence, after seeing the Viceroy and the sights of the Western Capital, his Highness purposes to extend his trip to Benares and Calcutta.

THE letter really addressed by Lord Northbrook to Mr. Forsyth, regarding his share in the Kuka executions, does little more than acknowledge the trifling difference between what Mr. Forsyth actually wrote and what he was supposed to have written to Mr. Cowan. The gist of the matter in fact turns upon the difference between "you have acted admirably," and "you have acted with energy and promptitude." His Lordship fairly enough remarks:—

Although the correction of the letter does not affect the fact of the full approbation and confirmation of Mr. Cowan's conduct by you, the use of the word "admirably," which was erroneously attributed to you, appears to the Governor general in Council to be calculated to convey the impression of a more cordial sympathy with Mr. Cowan's action than the words really used implied.

His Lordship also is willing to believe that when Mr. Forsyth wrote, he was "not aware that Mr. Cowan had put to death six men after the receipt of" his letter of January 17. At the same time, significantly adds his Lordship:—

Your statement, an extract from which is contained in the letter of the 22nd March, shows that you believe Mr. Cowan to have received, before any of the prisoners were executed, general instructions from you, contained in a previous letter, enjoining legal action, written before Mr. Cowan had proposed to execute any prisoners summarily.

It is absurd therefore to say that this letter in any way "exonerates" Mr. Forsyth.

A Times telegram of November 11 from Karachi reports that the Khan of Khelat had a private interview with the Viceroy at Sukkur on the 4th of November. In answer to an address from the Karachi Chamber of Commerce on the 11th, the Viceroy announced his objections to the transit duty now levied on cotton at that port. The export duty on grain and seed was less objectionable. Its continuance would depend on the general financial policy which will be adopted next year, when he hoped there would be a remission of taxation. We regret to hear that he did not consider it desirable that Sind should be placed under the Government of the Punjab. The Viceroy has been very well received at Karachi, whence he was to start on the night of the 11th for Bombay.

On the 14th November Lord Northbrook arrived at Bombay, where he was met on landing by the Governor, Sir P. Wodehouse, the principal rajahs, and native chiefs. A brilliant procession was formed to the Government House, his Excellency meeting with an enthusiastic reception from the immense crowd which lined the route. Grand preparations were being made for the Darbar, which had been fixed for Saturday last.

ACCORDING to the latest Indian telegram the Begum of Bhopal was invested on Saturday last with the Star of India. The ceremony was exceedingly brilliant. The Begum appeared veiled. The assemblage inside the encampment numbered over two hundred, and the crowd outside was immense.

AMONG the "distinguished visitors" who were awaiting Lord Northbrook's arrival at Bombay is Sayid Nur Mohammad Shah, who comes as envoy from the Amir of Kabul to confer with the Viceroy on the subject of the disputed boundary in Sistán between Persian and Afghan ground. It would seem from this announcement, for which we are indebted to the Bombay Gazette, that Shír Ali for one is not at all satisfied with the settlement proposed by Sir F. Goldsmid and General Pollock during their mission to Teherán. If so, and the boundary has already been decided by the umpires whom Shír Ali agreed to accept, we can only hope that Lord Northbrook will give the Sayid as good reasons for acquiescing in an undesired conclusion, as we have for accepting the Geneva Judgment and the Berlin solution of the San Juan difficulty. It is seldom that both parties to an arbitration are equally satisfied with the result; but the decision of an impartial umpire should at least remain unquestioned by those who agreed to take it in settlement of all disputes therewith connected.

CAPTAIN GIBSON of the Bengal Staff Corps seems to have been heavily punished for his attempt to bring home a charge of bribery against the Dewán of the Rewah Rajah. It will be remembered that he himself was tried and honourably acquitted on a charge of taking bribes from the very man whom he sought to expose. For some time before the trial he had been placed on a subsistence allowance, and in spite of his subsequent acquittal he has been removed from political employ, without any compensation for the previous loss of pay. The only point for which he was blamed by the Commander-in-Chief was his having failed to report the attempted bribery to his superior officer, and this shortcoming Captain Gibson has since explained by a reference to the friendship existing between Captain Goodfellow and the Dewan. He thought it useless under the circumstances to report a matter the truth of which he could not at the moment prove. The explanation, which seems so reasonable, ought at any rate to have saved him from further suffering on account of a transaction in which his innocence had been clearly established. For being guilty at the very worst of a trifling indiscretion, he is condemned to suffer in purse and prospects almost as heavily as if he had been guilty of taking the proffered bribe. If this be justice, it is hard to say what constitutes the reverse.

In speaking on the Punjab Salt Bill, Sir John Strachey combated the notion that his Government had any desire to pick holes in the legislative work achieved of late years by such masters of their art as Sir H. Maine and Mr. F. Stephen. He exulted on the contrary in "the rare 'good fortune' which had given two such men to India, which mainly through their efforts had 'already, in great measure, obtained the priceless benefits of good and simple law.'" He himself well remembered "the shameful abuses, the miserable technicalities of the procedure of the Courts, the endless litigation, and the cruel hardship which resulted to the people" under the old state of things before the work of reform had fairly begun. Mr. Hobhouse also, the new Law Member, bore ready witness to the legislative genius and the enormous amount of labour and talent employed in the construction of the Indian Statute-Book by his colleagues and predecessors in the Council. The amendments introduced into some recent Acts were introduced solely for the purpose of "making those Acts work more smoothly." They were needed simply because, in repealing whole bodies of pre-existing law, "some small portions intended to be re-enacted had been omitted." Such slips were sure to occur even in England, where the means of guarding against them were much more ample. But the work that now devolved upon him was "not the work of revisal or criticism at all. It was done with the honest intention of making the machine work, and with the view of furthering, not of derogating from the acts already accomplished."

A TELEGRAM from Berlin informs us that the foreign Governments to whom England has addressed herself touching the expedition to Zanzibar have expressed their sympathy with the undertaking, but have not promised any active support. This is about as much as we could reasonably expect, and the want of more active support may be regarded as an advantage rather than a hindrance to the efforts we are about to make on that side of Africa.

ACCORDING to a recent telegram the Russians appear to have given up their projected expedition against Khiva—at least for the present. If the Khan has followed the advice offered him from Simla, by yielding up his Russian prisoners and making suitable amends for past misconduct, the Russians would have been left without any immediate excuse for continuing their hostile movement.

THE arrival of the Serapis at Bombay has been reported by telegraph.

ACCORDING to a telegram from Constantinople, the Suez Canal Company insist upon their recent advance of tolls, and talk of appealing to the decision of the French Government. The Sultan on the other hand denies the right of any French tribunal to put its own interpretation on the Act of Concession, the right of interpreting which is claimed for Turkey alone. As the company moreover is in fact an Egyptian Company, and therefore subject to Turkish jurisdiction, the Turkish Government declines to allow the Company's differences with third parties to go before a foreign Court. It seems probable however that the Maritime Powers will be invited to hold a conference at Constantinople, in order to agree upon a uniform plan for measuring the tonnage of vessels passing through the Canal.

In an address delivered last Monday before the Social Science Association, the late Law Member of the Indian Government enlarged on the progress already made in India towards a complete system of codified law. Mr. Fitzjames Stephen traced the growth of Anglo-Indian legislation from the first set of rules and regulations framed by Warren Hastings, through the attempts at a codified system under Lord Cornwallis, down to the introduction of the three codes which now embody, in "a distinct, systematic, written form," all the most important results of former legislation. He showed, moreover, how the ancient legislation had been so consolidated by himself and his predecessors, since 1859, that "there is hardly any subject on which the whole law is not comprised in a single Act, amended, where that is necessary, by Acts so drawn, that the alterations can be noted as errata." After a becoming tribute to the legislative labours of Lord Macaulay, whose draft of the Penal Code differed but slightly from the Code as actually passed in 1860, to the work achieved by Mountstuart Elphinstone in Bombay, and by the brothers Lawrence in the Punjab, and to the help he himself had received from Sir Henry Maine and other members of the Viceroy's Council, Mr. Stephen went on to specify the amount of labour involved in the process of codifying the laws of India. The Code of Civil Procedure, as passed in 1859, got rid of 147 Acts and Regulations, laid down simple rules for all courts and all kinds of causes, and "prevented the growth of any distinction between law and equity." The Penal Code, which has been in constant use for the last eleven years, and has needed very little amending since it was first enacted, condenses into 511 sections nearly all the criminal law of India. To compare such a code with our English criminal law, remarks Mr. Stephen with melancholy force, is "like comparing cosmos with chaos." The Criminal Procedure Code again, as revised by Mr. Stephen himself, embodies 270 distinct enactments in its 541 sections, besides embracing the decisions on 1,500 or 2,000 cases argued in the last ten years. To digest into one clear, concise Act the whole law on a particular subject has been the guiding principle of successive law-reformers in India. The Indian Succession Act alone contains the pith of "a whole library of English law-books." So satisfactory are the results already achieved, that an officer in the wildest parts of the frontier can at once refer for guidance to his pocket code, while native policemen may easily learn by heart those sections of the Police Act which specially concern them. Indian experience, in short, has triumphantly shown the advantages of codification, or "the expression in plain words and the perspicuous arrangement of actual laws, of rules drawn up for practical purposes by the light of common experience;" a task which Mr. Stephen declares to be "as easy as any other sort of skilled labour." His own experience in dealing with the Indian Contract Law of 1872 enables him to attest the amount of intelligent interest taken by educated men in legal questions, "when law is divested of all technicalities, stated in simple and natural language, and so arranged as to show the natural relation of different parts of the subject." To other instances of success achieved in this direction, let us add, what the speaker modestly omitted, his own Evidence Act of last year, which will henceforth replace a whole jungle of past legislation. The moral of his address of course was, that what India had done so well England could do with even less difficulty, if only her statesmen would make the attempt. We should like to see Mr. Stephen entrusted with a task so worthy of his powers.

EMBOLDENED by the rumour, which we hope is true, that Lord Northbrook intends to re-open the question of broad or narrow gauge for Indian State Railways, Mr. Lee Smith has renewed through the Times his protest against the ill-advised policy of carrying a narrow-gauge line from Karachi to the North-Western frontier. Once more he sets himself to prove that there is "neither excuse nor apology for sacrificing the efficiency of two military lines, upon a plea of economy which it is impossible to substantiate." Mr. Lee Smith's fruitless efforts to obtain a hearing for his offer to complete the Indus Valley and Peshawar lines on the broad gauge, at less than the estimated cost of such lines on the new metre gauge, have already been noticed in these columns. "It may be true, but you cannot prove it," was the answer given him by some of those to whom he appealed. Later official estimates and reports however have only strengthened his belief in the superior cheapness of his own plans, and Lord Northbrook's rumoured intentions have impelled him to undertake to satisfy "any impartial individual or committee" of the truth of his own assertions. He finds from one official estimate that the entire cost of a narrow-gauge line from Karachi to Lahore, and of altering the sections already made, would exceed $3\frac{1}{2}$ millions or £180,000 more than his own estimate for completing the same line on the gauge already adopted for parts of it. If Mr. Molesworth's estimates be compared with those of Mr. Fowler, the saving on the side of the broad gauge would amount to nearly £600,000. Either way therefore there is "no escape from the fact that the pretext of economy for breaking the gauge upon the Indus Valley line has conspicuously failed." Mr. Lee Smith proceeds to show, by a reference to the Gauge Committee's estimates, that the cost of rolling-stock sufficient for all contingencies would be greater by nearly £300 a mile on the narrow than on the broad gauge line. The chief reason for this was clearly given by Colonel Kennedy when he pointed out the difference in respect of bulk between the ordinary traffic on our Indian railway, and that on a mineral-bearing line in Wales. The more we consider the arguments advanced from so many quarters in favour of maintaining the standard gauge, the stronger becomes our conviction of the impolicy of supplanting it by a gauge so manifestly unsuited to the requirements of a country like India.

WE are glad to learn that the provisional arrangements of the late directors of the Madras Military Fund, with regard to the pensions of insane subscribers, their wives, and families, have been made permanent by the Secretary of State. These arrangements, at first adopted for five years, were continued in 1863 for a further term of ten years. In securing their permanence for their future, the Government may claim the credit of having honestly discharged the obligations transferred to it when it took over the assets of the Fund in question.

HINDU FINANCIERS.

IN a recent letter from Calcutta the Times correspondent gives his readers an interesting sketch of the career of an eminent Marátha statesman, who, after raising Travancore by ten years of skilful management into a model State, has just accepted the not less trying mission of financial reform in the dominions of Maharajah Holkar. If he can only get fair play on the scene of his future labours, there is no doubt that Sir Mádhava Rao, who is only in his forty-fifth year, will succeed as brilliantly at Indore as he has done already in Southern India; and one of the worst governed States in the whole Peninsula may yet come to be a worthy rival of Gwalior and Travancore. The contemplation of Sir Mádhava's past achievements naturally led the writer in question to consider whether our Indian revenues might not be advantaged by a judicious exchange of Sir Richard Temple for a Hindu of Sir Mádhava's talent and experience. "Dare we"—he asks—"in view of the present and the future, of the peace of India and the security of the Queen's Government, employ" such a man? "If we dare"—he continues—"we shall soon have the revenue safe." Brave words these, but fully warranted by the teachings of Indian history in every age of which we have any historical knowledge. Under the rule alike of Pathán, Moghal, and Marátha sovereigns, India from time to time felt the healing influence of the medicines prescribed by financial doctors of the old Hindu race. The great Akbar was not the first Mohammedan ruler who had the wisdom to employ Hindus in the highest offices of State; and Todar Mal himself, the most renowned of Indian administrators and not the least successful of Indian commanders, was but one instance out of many that could be named of that national genius alike for strategy and civil rule, which seems to characterise the Hindu and Italian branches of the Aryan race. Sir Mádhava Rao too belongs to that section of his race, the Marátha Brahmans, whose skill in all matters of revenue gave shape, coherence, and living force to the dreams of men like Sivaji and Baji Rao. The mainstay, whether of Pathán rule in the Dakhan, or of Moghal rule in Hindustan, was the employment of great Hindu officers both in peace and war; and the stupid bigotry which led Aurangzib to dispense with their services did more than ought else to hasten the disruption of Bábar's empire. It is high time for the successors of the Moghals to take a lesson from the past, and attempt to rule by the strength as well as the weakness of their Hindu subjects. We are glad to see that in this respect the leading journal supports the views suggested by its Calcutta correspondent. The presence of a skilled native financier in the Supreme Council would go far to solve many a fiscal problem which has hitherto puzzled the brains of English statesmen in India. Seeing what splendid revenues were raised without difficulty by the great financiers of Akbar and Shah Jahan, we could well afford to renew an experiment which would anyhow secure us from much of the ill-feeling and alarm caused by our unfortunate efforts to pour new wine into the old bottles of Eastern usage. A native finance-minister of the stamp of Sir Mādhava Rao might do much to reconcile his countrymen to the fresh demands which an English Viceroy might be compelled to make upon their pockets; and he would certainly take good care to enforce those demands in the way least likely to offend their prejudices or press unfairly on their productive means. It may seem a bold experiment to replace Sir Richard Temple by a modern Todar Mal; but if historical examples are ever worth anything, we may regard it as almost certain that boldness in this direction would bear good fruit in due season both for the governing and the governed race.

GRIEVANCES OF NATIVE PRINCES.

A LETTER received in London by a Mohammedan gentleman from a friend at Bombay throws a suggestive light on the processes employed by English officers in the management of our native feudatories. "I told you"—says the writer, a Hindu merchant and banker of high standing, great wealth, and undoubted loyalty—"that his Highness had been invited by Government to be present in Bombay on the occasion of the Viceroy's arrival in November. The invitation, I am told, was of a pressing character."

The writer, whose remarks are faithfully quoted in his own English, proceeds to tell how he has heard from private advices that the Prince in question, whose name need not be given here, is anxious to be excused from attendance on the Viceroy; and the writer trusts that his Highness will have the courage to resist the pressure that may be put upon him. Besides other considerations on which he touches, there is, he continues, "the money question, the question of the expenses attendant on the journey, and nuzzurs. In the case of a flourishing native State this may not be felt much, but there are some States in Kattyawar which are still involved in debt. For the British Government to call upon the Rajahs of these States to undertake a journey like this every two or three years,—for such has been the case of late,—and place their territory under a heavier load of debt, is I conceive, a sin on the part of the Paramount Power. I learn, from the papers to-day that Colonel Anderson, the Kattyawar Political Agent, has not only urged strongly upon some of the native Princes in the circumstances above described that they ought to visit Bombay, but has also told them to prepare themselves to offer nuzzuranas, both to the Viceroy and the Governor, not in the shape of clothes and jewellery, as is the usual custom, but in the shape of gold or silver money!! Can the greediness for money on the part of Government be more mean? Is the deficit in the Imperial Exchequer to be thus made up? I cry 'fie' upon Government for this exhibition of low avarice in the eyes of native Princes. Such, however, are the stern facts, enough to afford matter for serious reflection to statesmen interested in the Indian Empire."

If the writer's language seems to be a little strong for so loyal a subject, he may at any rate plead fair provocation in the facts alleged. If Colonel Anderson has really directed the Chiefs of Katiwār to make their offerings in money instead of clothes and jewels, some higher power must have prompted him to suggest a course so contrary to former usage, and so strongly savouring of the retail dealer's shop. The excuse for preferring gold to khilats is to be found, it seems, in the fact that clothes and jewels are things which the Government can only sell at a loss. Excuses of this kind seem to condemn themselves. Does it become the dignity of a great Government to turn a kind of customary courtesy into a question of mere rupees? That sort of vulgar chaffering was supposed to have gone out with the East India Company, which never, by the way, thought of reaping a rich pecuniary harvest out of the nazars of native princes. It would be far better to abolish the custom of taking fees and presents from anyone who attends a State-Darbār, than to make such an occasion a mere cloak for filling the public purse at the expense of those who come to pay honour to a high public officer. If the Native States contribute less than their due share to the imperial revenues, it is surely not in this way that the deficiency should be made good.

The kind of pressure put upon native chiefs by zealous politicals for purposes in themselves praiseworthy or politic is also apt to breed results by no means desirable. To some of the greater or more prosperous feudatories it may be no great burden to meet a Viceroy or a Governor on tour; and their pride or loyalty may be gratified if their pockets suffer. But the honour of exchanging compliments with her Majesty's representatives appears to have far fewer and fainter charms for many a small or struggling potentate in other parts of India than Katiwār alone. Within the last four years the Princes of Katiwār, Mahi-Kānta, Gujarāt, and the Sirdars of the Dakhan have been summoned more or less urgently to the Broach Exhibition, to meet Sir S. Fitzgerald on his tour, to wait upon Lord Mayo, and to pay their respects to the Duke of Edinburgh. The splendour of their dress and retinue on such occasions was doubtless wonderful to behold; but how many of them could afford, as things were, to make so goodly a show? If the cost of their journeys and ceremonial visits sometimes provoked complaints, inaudible to official ears, they might at any rate reimburse themselves by taxing their unfortunate subjects. In the same way it was highly edifying to hear that this or that native Prince had been "persuaded" to devote large sums to charitable purposes in memory of the Duke of Edinburgh's visit. But the sort of munificence which led the Gaikwar of Baroda for instance to offer two lakhs of rupees, or £20,000, for the building a Sailors' Home at Bombay, may be called by another name, when we think of the additional burdens which his people on that very account have probably had to bear.

POST-OFFICE ORDERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In continuation of the letter published in your Paper of September 30 last, I have the honour of calling your attention to a letter from the Government of India of the same date regarding the working of the money-order system in India. You have republished it in Page 1094 of your Paper of the 11th inst.

This money order system corresponds with the post-office order system in England.

Owing to the frequent instances of fraud and defalcation, and to the common complaints of the insufficiency of the remuneration allowed to the agents, the Governor-General in Council is pleased to decide that the office of money-order agent shall be abolished, and that the issue and payment of money orders, except at the Presidency towns, shall henceforth be a part of the duties of the Treasury establishment.

As the Treasury Establishments in India are already overworked, I beg you to urge the Secretary of State to relinquish for the present the idea of entering into competition with Exchange bankers by granting post-office orders in England and India to be issued in one country and paid in the other.—Your obedient servant,

[Rather too late for that—eh?—Ed. A. I. M.]

TRANSLATIONS OF THE BIBLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

"I only wish I could say that the translation is really a good one. I have honestly bestowed much severe labour upon it. But my Sanscrit studies have not been either deep enough or extensive enough to enable me to do full justice to the importance of the undertaking. Perhaps also I lack the requisite enthusiasm for Sanscrit."—Rev. J. Wenger's words, quoted in the Times newspaper of the 15th October, 1872.

SIR,—The above are the words of the humble Christian who has just completed the latest translation of the Bible into Sanscrit. Sanscrit is the foundation of the languages of upwards of 150 millions of souls; ought not we Christians to feel ashamed that Mr. Wenger should have been left for twenty-four years to toil at his pious task unaided and almost unheeded in the solitude of a house on the outskirts of Calcutta?

We call ourselves a Christian nation, but the apathy we display in neglecting to revise the translations into the languages spoken by our Indian subjects, from whom we exact so enormous a tribute, is disgraceful and inexcusable.

The reasons assigned by different sections of the Church of England for refusing to ask for Government aid are worthy of consideration.

One section of the Church thinks that co-operation in the work of translation is impossible while so much antagonism on Church questions exists. This party considers that the English translation is very imperfect, and it consequently despairs of any perfect translation into any language spoken in India; it argues that for many of the more important words in the Bible there are no equivalents in any of the Indian languages.

Another section of the Church thinks that the existing translations are quite good enough; and that, notwithstanding the fact that most of the translators during the past sixty years have been very imperfectly acquainted with Hebrew and Greek, still the people understand the meaning of the translations, which is all that is required. This party thinks that a translation can be made direct from English into Hindi without the intervention of Greek and Sanscrit; it declares that Government will never consent to assist in revising a translation into any dead language; and it shows its sympathy with Dissenters by renouncing all connection with Government.

A third section of the Church urges that we have not yet found the perfect original text either in the Hebrew or Greek; and that until we can find it in some hidden ancient manuscript there is no use in making expensive translations of an incorrect text. Some belonging to this party urge that a great portion of the Bible is useless or erroneous, and that mankind are made good, not by reading the Bible, but by civilisation, science, and commerce. The disciples of this school may be considered to be represented by the Times in one of its articles of the 18th of September, 1867, out of which I extract the following passage:—"If the East is regenerated by Western thought, a result will have been accomplished to which there has been hitherto no parallel in the history of the world; but the enthusiasm of those who still cherish the hope of converting savages by means of tracts and Bibles is even more difficult to justify."

THE HINDUSTANI ABROAD.—III.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In the insuperable interests of enlightened civilisation, perhaps it is better now to tell you what I am noticing after I came to this country about your religion. Because one thing always in Hindostan Padres are telling us, "This religion is best of all!" But I cannot now recognise which he means! Many religions you have got in this great metropolis of Babylon! Then if a poor Hindoo or Mussalman will change, which must he take? His poor head will be in a jumble to find out. One Sunday I asked Mr. Conway where I had better go to? He replied, "Best place Westminster Abbey." Then he go away. Soon as gone, another boarder standing near say, "Westminster Abbey bad place, bad religion, not true, better go hear celebrated Dr. Manning at Roman Catholic Chapel, this is real religion." Now how to understand which is right? I am lately reading that one thousand crores of village rustics and mechanic labourers in back slums cannot understand any religion! Why do you not teach before you send missionary to India to disturb? Mussalman and Hindoos all very comfortable; they understand their own religion. If good man he die happy, but wicked man all the same every place. Besides I am hearing that some profoundest English scholars cannot lately believe in Christian faith themselves; they are saying in Conway's boarding-house at dinner, that for instance, Mr. Huxley and Mr. Darwin are the Plato and Aristotle of the age. Another thing, all natives in India, because you have got Hindustani servants, can see that the English do not pray much. Cook boys can tell that private soldiers do not pray a little. How then can we believe this is true religion? Also in this great Babylon on Sunday morning, I observe the custom that dressed smart in fashion all go to church. But other days in shabby dress no service got. Mussalman rich and poor pray five times a-day, Hindoos plenty times. Which is best custom of these?

One day I walked in Regent-street with Mahmoud Shah, passing by a place called St. George's Hall, a tall thin man, red nosed, with long shabby black coat gave a bill. It was written that a Padre was giving a sermon, one shilling each. So we went in. I thought now he will explain to me clearly the Christian religion, No! But he called out in a voice of thunder, "Shameful Church this, disestablish him!" "Bishops take poor people's money, idle, useless." Clergyman careless, preach dead doctrine, hypocrite. All humbug, all mistaken." I could not understand till Mahmoud Shah explained that he wants to annihilate Established Church of England, then everyone take what religion he like best.

As we walked backwards to Conway's establishment, the brain in my poor head felt as if a red-hot coal had got on it, more jumbled than ever. I was vexed and thinking within me "Your religion is too difficult for us, no wonder the missionaries and Padres in India cannot make us into Christians, though they are trying bellowing in the streets since one hundred years, because they preach dead doctrine hypocrites, and cannot understand themselves. If they cannot understand how can they make us understand to be converted?" Then I am recollecting that in the elevated Koran it is written in the chapter under heading "The low" that "if fruit is good, then we recognise the tree is proper sort, grafted not jungly," then if plenty charity you have got, why so many miserable beggars starving in your streets? Women beggars only few in my country and only many beggars for religion as Faquirs, Jogees, Kalunders, Sunyassies, &c., but here everywhere I am seeing bags of skeletons and bones like ghosts, with clasped hands begging, and rich jolly man only looks in shop window, frowns on forehead and in growling voice say, "I give you up to police."

In the Koran it is written "It is absolutely commanded to give one-tenth of income in charity, but it is better to give one-fifth." If European rich gentlemen should give annually only one-tenth then not possible that so many poor people run about helpless.

At last I am come to conclusion that perhaps your religion is excellent for you, but for Mussalman and Hindoos it is not proper. It is best for them not to change. Besides there is fear that if they try, perhaps their own religion will run away, and they not able to catch the tail of the other one, then as transatlantic American cousin say, they will be just like a "Coon up a gum-tree."—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

FAIZ ALI KHAN.

THE ASIATIC IN LONDON.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—The subject of this letter may not be without interest and of serious import to many of your readers in the Far East, as it has been a source of serious reflection and study to the writer—viz., the immigration of Asiatic youths to this country, ostensibly to take advantage of our various colleges and scholastic institutions, and to fit them in future to take part in the administration of their own land in the different departments of the public service in India, to which they have an undoubted right, besides others, as merchants, professions, trades and business in all its various branches.

It becomes therefore worthy of enquiry how far such teaching in our home schools, and the general habits of life of Indian students, in this our modern Babylon, tend to form and fit them for the altered and entirely different state of life on their return to India, in having to rehabilitate themselves to those local ties of family and other associations that their more advanced opinions and ideas of their self-importance and self-conceit have tended to sever. In fact, they illustrate and act the role of that little amphibious animal the frog in the fable, and hence discomforts, discontent, and unhappiness accrue to themselves and those around them, coupled with difficulties to the Governing Powers, as to the manner of dealing with these improved and Anglicised elements of modern civilisation in the rising generation of the natives of India, but more especially the young Bengalee.

Such a sojourn in England, with its vast liberty of action, is in the Asiatic mind apt to suggest other principles—not complimentary or grateful to its tutor, as a study of the vernacular papers might show. The native thus trained longs to try and solve for himself that difficult task of self-government. Self-knowledge has been reached only so far as that superficial adornment of his person and his self-swagger, which renders him ridiculous to his more sensible and enlightened countrymen, and those Europeans with whom he is brought into contact. And I apprehend that the examples are but few where English-trained Asiatics in English colleges and schools have risen to any great pinnacle of fame in their own land, or even maintained the respect and admiration of their native confreres. They, therefore, throw themselves on their Anglicisms, and kow-tow to the Government powers in the most abject manner, and while in office they are often tempted to commit acts of injustice to their fellow-men, to illustrate their zeal, and their desire to merit the favour of the burra sahibs. And if they should temper their judicial and other acts with consideration and mercy, it often subjects them to doubts and suspicions of all those evil influences of bribery and corruption by which, for generations, the administration of law and justice in India has been contaminated.

The Thomason College, that at Delhi, the Roorkee College, the Money School and other immense establishments scattered widely over India, are imposing enough in their appearance, their pretensions, and their professions. They are noble edifices, imposing in their grandeur, and filled with professors, who pass through Government-house and then the Gazette to their several lucrative sinecures; voluminous reports are printed, examinations held, degrees conferred, diplomas granted and all the forms of advanced English and foreign universities mimicked in their most fantastic and shallow shapes, making, in fact, a great to do about nothing, while the only true and practical test of knowledge and usefulness is most remarkable for its absence.

Now in educating Asiatics something more than the three "R's" are required, for I believe them to be as capable as any European in mastering and acquiring all the advanced sciences and learning of our own country, as many of the scholars of Bengal, Bombay, and Madras will illustrate; and it becomes remarkable how many of the middle classes in India are not only able to read and write in their own language, but in three or four others, English and often French beside, and their patience and perseverance of study in overcoming difficulties of this kind is one of their chief characteristics.

But with all these good and useful elements they become sadly debased and leavened during their sojourn in England. They pass through the curriculum of the college with decency and order, for they are as a rule obedient to "orders and regulations," but when loosened from these scholastic bonds of discipline they readily become the victims to those loose pleasures around them which they have not tasted and long to experience, and often to their serious disadvantage and final overthrow, for they cannot go very far without finding the wolf in women's clothing that is ready to devour them.

Now, after careful study of the subject of these student immigrants, I feel the absence of an intermediary institution to advise and to act for them, between the distant homes of these young men, and the schools and colleges of England, an institution that could be so organised that it might watch over their well-being, and act on the part of those who sent them in good faith, confidence, and great hopes, as a guide and adviser during their sojourn in England, where the habits and mode of life are so different, and more alluring than they have seen or experienced, and where the temptations to stray meet them in every path they walk. And I am quite sure such an Association as I have ventured to suggest would meet with merited approbation, and the assistance of a great number of those wealthy and advanced natives of India who now possess a strong and earnest desire that their sons should have all the advantages that England can give in its scholastic colleges and institutions, which undoubtedly open for them a path to those appointments in the public service of India for which a local education in India would scarcely fit them.

The aping of the Bengalee Baboo is often at best a sad burlesque on our English mode of teaching manners and example; his first rudiments of LIFE, a la Anglaise, being to eat English dinners, with his pale sherry in private hotels, followed by a sip of brandy and soda and a mild Havannah, his feet on the table, and ha'ha'ing upon Government measures, or a loose story of the demi monde. This is not an extravagant picture, as the writer has seen such examples almost daily in the hotels of Calcutta, while the arrogance and self conceit of others who have visited "to pay their respects to master" have in many cases been most exasperating, disgusting, and unbearable; but I am glad to be able to say that there are also many exceptions to this rule.

The subject matter of this letter is of great importance, and one that I trust to see fully ventilated and discussed, as I do think that the time has arrived when some necessary action regarding such immigrant students should be determined upon for their better guidance in this country, and ultimate good and prosperity in their own, and in perfecting them both morally and socially for a higher and more important position, and in showing a worthy example to those who would follow after them.—

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

THALMA.

TRANSIT DUTIES.

In the matter of octroi and transit duties Native Opinion holds that the Council have committed a great mistake. These duties were first imposed for a special purpose. That has never been fulfilled, and is not ever likely to be. The ordinary rates and taxes are quite sufficient for our ordinary wants; and if the Government will not create fat berths and useless departments, we shall be able to pay our expenses if the Government pays its fair share of the municipal taxes. As a matter of principle, all taxes on necessities should be avoided in India, and transit duties should be shunned. Once introduced into Bombay the example is sure to become contagious, for the tendency to throw one's burdens on his neighbours is natural in the West as well in the East. We shall give one example. At a certain small seaport in the Northern Koukan, a municipality was projected in 1866, July. Its expense was to be defrayed from the import and export duties on trade. This was openly avowed; and on the faith of that the application was based. Some difficulties were however encountered, and the majority of the inhabitants, finding that their calculations regarding the "sinews of war" were likely to prove wrong, petitioned against the establishment of the municipality. The magistrate would not hear of this new petition; but Government seem to have seen the absurdity of introducing a municipality into a town against the wishes of the people, and it was withdrawn. Here is an example of the open introduction of transit duties, which failing, the community could not or would not pay for the municipality. This was at Tarapoor, and on the opposite side of the river such duties were being actually realised for some time. At Bassein, where the notorious Yeshwantrao Balvant is one of the Municipal Commissioners, there is a duty, amongst other things, on molasses, liquid and solid, beetle-nut, and on oil-cake. Although these are nominally duties on imports they are all chiefly articles of export; and as oil-cake is used for manure in the plantations in the whole district, a tax thereon is a transit duty in favour of the municipality; and we understand it is likely to affect the trade in this article, as it has already injured the trade in molasses, which is now exported from other places. Again, the duty on sugar is really a transit duty, for large quantities of it are sent from Bombay to the northern and southern ports of Western India and also up-country. As regards grain, there ought to be no two opinions; and even as respects ghee the Hon. Mr. Mangaldas was quite right in asserting it to be a necessary, and not a luxury; and if the chief secretary does not know this we pity the existence of such want of elementary knowledge in high places. His Excellency the Governor has perhaps come to look upon beer and spirits as necessities; but thousands of his countrymen in England, and many even in India differ from him in this respect, so that Mr. Mangaldas is in good company still. Mr. Tucker has alluded to the maintenance of lunatic asylums by municipalities in England, but has he not told us elsewhere that India is not England? That really makes up the whole difference. And if that difference did not exist, the present Bill would have been consigned to oblivion long ago.

MR. CAMPBELL'S EDUCATION SCHEME.

The Englishman, after pointing out the obvious objections that present themselves against Mr. Campbell's recent educational orders reducing the Director of Public Instruction to the position of a clerk of the Bengal Secretariat, hold, that there are yet graver objections to those further orders, by which he transfers all the really important duties of inspectors of schools to the shoulders of district officers and commissioners of divisions. In the first place, collectors and magistrates have already far more work than they can well keep pace with; to impose on them the whole work of an inspector, in addition to that which they already have, seems like putting the last straw on the camel's back. It is true that Mr. Campbell's resolution talks a great deal about local Committees of Instruction, with commissioners as peripatetic presidents, and collectors as local chiefs or vice-presidents. Mr. Campbell even demurely marks off the responsibilities and the patronage of the committees, from those of the collectors; but of course this is little better than a pleasing farce. All the world, if it know anything of Mofussil administration, knows perfectly well that the committee will act as the recording clerks of the collector's orders; unless, indeed, a committee, as sometimes is the case, turns restive, when it simply acts as an obstruction to all business. Disregarding, then, the action of these committees, as being at best passive or negative, the administration of the schools will be carried out by the deputy inspectors acting directly under the collector's orders, and amenable only to him. Does anyone who is acquainted with the overwhelming pressure of work that is already concentrated on these unfortunate district officers believe for one moment that any one of them (even with the aid of one of the inspector's clerks which has been graciously offered to them "if necessary") will be able to exercise anything approaching an adequate supervision over the schools of his district? We are well acquainted with the heroism and self-devotion of these officers as a class; we know that, as a rule, they will do as much as man can do, effectually to discharge their assigned duties, however onerous; we have heard of more than one district officer whose head has already been nearly broken by the "precious" balios of the present Lieutenant-Governor; but we protest against the tendency to ride a willing horse to death. We believe that there is hardly a district in Bengal in which the collector and magistrate is not, under the present regime, seriously overworked; nor can we shut our eyes to the fact that abuses must ultimately arise if such a state of affairs becomes at all permanent. And must it not become permanent if a collector has henceforth to perform, for his own district, the very heavy work of an inspector of schools in addition to all his other duties? We fear that the only possible result of such a system must be that very often the work will necessarily be either hastily and imperfectly done, or performed by untrustworthy native subordinates in a manner worse than imperfect. The commissioners will be the presidents of all committees in their own divisions, and "will exercise a general supervision and control over them." This means, in other words, that there is to be a little independent Educational Department in each division, the commissioner being his own director of public instruction, acting of course (as the departmental director has hitherto acted) under the direct orders of the Government. Under such a system it is obvious that anything like uniformity of action in educational matters must be an impossibility. Under the imperious rule that at present obtains in Bengal, it is possible that all the commissioners may be kept so well in hand by their great chief as to be unable to largely develop any private hobbies of their own. Even this much, is at least dubious; and for the future, we doubt if any of Mr. Campbell's successors will follow his example in attempting to substitute direct personal government from head quarters for the delegated authority of trusted subordinates. But the best possible argument against Mr. Campbell's new system is to be found in the fact that it has already been tried and found wanting. In its broad features it is identical with the system, or no system, that prevailed here before the establishment of the Education Department under the orders of the Home authorities. Every one who is acquainted with the internal history of this province prior to 1854 knows what a miserable failure that system was. We need not here enter into its details, for it was utterly condemned by the unanimous voice of the Home Government, the Government of India, and the local authorities; and the system which has just received its coup de grace from Mr. Campbell was elaborated under the joint auspices, and by the combined wisdom of all those Governments. To say that the departmental system had numerous and grave failings, is no more than to say that it was the work of mortal men, and that it has been up to the present time in a state of progressive development. We have often pointed out such failings; but we doubt whether anyone will assert that it failed in the same way that its predecessor had failed. When Mr. Campbell virtually affirms that the departmental system was not susceptible of reform by any process less thorough than actual abolition, we think that few who have studied the question will be able to agree with him; when he, on his own sole responsibility, orders the adoption of a system which is practically identical with the earlier one condemned by some of the greatest statesmen that India has ever seen, we cannot but fear the most deplorable results from a policy so blindly arrogant and so impatient of the teachings of the experience of predecessors.

THE ATALIK GHAZI.

England has no interest, as far as can be seen at present, in challenging Russia in relation to the Atalik Ghazi. But the Indian Government, we maintain, ought to know what the Atalik Ghazi is doing, what manner of man he is, what gifts and resources he possesses, and to some extent, what are his intentions. Russia knows everything about him. We know nothing about him, and probably never will, unless we have to acquire the knowledge in war. One day he is reported to have been victorious over his enemies, the Tungani—victorious ever so many months ago. Then we have news of his defeat, also ever so many months ago; and then perhaps of other victories and defeats, at similar long dates distant. We know no more in reality about his doings than we do of the Panthay and Chinese wars, and it is saying very little when we add that as much is known of the former as of the latter. It is a most remarkable fact, as indicative of the easy terms upon which we fancy that we hold India, that we have chronic, ceaseless, wars within distances which should be nothing to adventurous Englishmen, and yet we are content to know twelve months after date the bare fact that a great battle was fought, an immense number of lives lost, and a great political change effected. And even then what we learn is often by mere accident, from the story of some of those adventurous travellers who range Asia through and through. It can hardly be questioned that Russia has a great future in those regions. Whether she will extend to China and open from the westward that long sealed-up Empire, or whether she will find the limit of her progress where she is met by an old civilisation, apparently anything but effete, but the most extraordinary in character that the world ever knew, the future alone can show. It is evident, however, that under no present conditions have we either the right or the power to interfere, although we have the right to know, and an interest in knowing, exactly the real state of affairs. Once we had an amicable understanding—an understanding always limited by what England, as a free nation, could accept—there would be no reason in the world why a British officer should not travel to the extent of the Russian outposts.

NEW POSTAL SERVICE.—It is announced that the Government have sanctioned a subsidy for a monthly postal service between Aden and Zanzibar, and have accepted a tender by the British India Steam Navigation Company for its performance. The service will be begun on the 5th of next month, in connection with the arrival at Aden of London mails on Nov. 22. By selecting the port of Aden for the starting point, India, as well as England, will be brought into direct communication with the East Coast of Africa, and it is confidently expected that the service will not only develop trade, but tend to diminish slavery by conveying information of the movements of vessels employed in that traffic, while it will also provide means of communication between Sir Bartle Frere's mission and the authorities. It is proposed to connect the service at Zanzibar with one from Natal, and thus bring the entire outline of the African coast under the influence of regular postal communication.

BRAHMIN INTOLERANCE.—The Brahmins of Travancore have a remarkably good opinion of themselves. According to a paper of those parts, a road was open near Trevandrum when Sir T. Madava Row was Dewan, for the benefit of the people living in the adjacent villages. It seems that the Dewan has been asked to have the road shut up. The priest of a small and insignificant temple in the neighbourhood has represented to the Dewan that by this road running by the side of his temple and being made use of by people of all castes and creeds, the temple has been polluted, and that therefore for the sanctity of himself and his god the same should be blocked up. The Dewan has visited this road perhaps at the request of his Highness the Maharajah, before whom the priest first lodged his complaint; but it is to be hoped that before acceding to the priest's request, he will compare the utility of a high road for the public benefit with the interest of a single narrow-minded Brahmin. The late Dewan had a similar request made to him, but he would not listen to it, and we fancy the present will be equally obstinate. Brahmins in all parts of India might feel inclined to make such requests, but we think that it is only in Travancore that they would actually make their wishes known.—Madras Times, Oct. 16.

COLLECTOR-MAGISTRATES IN BENGAL.—The Magistrate-Collector of a big district in Bengal must have plenty to do. We see from the census papers that the area of his district ranges from 1,500 to 7,000 square miles; while the population under his charge runs from 1½ to 4½ millions, and is oftener over than under two millions. He has recently been made the de facto head of his district police, and he has now been charged with the duty of introducing a scheme of Government primary schools. We hope the primary education scheme may be successful. For the sake of Bengal Collectors we are glad to learn that the Indian Council has given a cordial approval to Mr. Campbell's scheme for raising the salaries of the larger Bengal Collectors more nearly to the level of the salaries of all Collectorships in Madras, Bombay, and the N. W. Provinces. At present the salaries of Bengal Collectors are Rs. 1,916 a month for the first Grade, and Rs. 1,500 a month for the second Grade; an acting Collector gets from Rs. 1,100 to Rs. 1,400 a month. The salaries of all Collectorships in the other regulating provinces of India are above Rs. 2,200 a month. We quite think that Bengal Collectors are entitled to have their positions improved, and the public service will certainly be benefited if good executive officers of some years' district experience can be kept as Collectors, instead of hurrying to be made Judges at once. Still the present is no time for increasing the public burdens merely to raise official salaries, and Mr. Campbell will have to find money for bettering his Collectorships by making savings elsewhere. We shall await with interest the unfolding of his scheme.—Pioneer, Oct. 12.

THE VICEROY AT LAHORE.

LAHORE, Oct. 20.—As I have already informed you by telegraph, the Viceroy arrived here on Saturday at 7.30 A.M., having spent the night in the train after leaving Umritsur. His Lordship left Umballa by special train at eleven o'clock on the night of the 7th inst.,—the Lieutenant-Governor having started early in the evening for Lahore in order to receive the Viceroy on his arrival at that place. At daybreak on the 18th the Viceregal party left the special train, which had been drawn up at Loodiana during the night, and drove across the dry bed of the Sutlej in dak gharries to Phillour. The Viceroy was escorted by a detachment of the Punjab mounted police. At Phillour a special train was in waiting, and after a run of two hours the party arrived at Umritsur. A guard-of-honour of the 58th Regiment was drawn up on the platform of the railway station to receive the Viceroy, who at once drove to Major-General Taylor's (the Commissioner's) house. The Viceroy passed a busy day in visiting the different places of interest in and about the city, amongst others the Town-hall and Government College and Missionary School. He also visited the Fort, and afterwards drove through the cantonments.

At Lahore his Excellency was met on the railway platform by the Lieutenant-Governor, his personal staff, and a number of civil and military officers, besides many native gentlemen. A guard-of-honour of H.M.'s 27th Regiment was also drawn up to receive him, and a Royal salute was fired from a battery of artillery, posted outside the railway station, as he left the railway carriage. Before proceeding to Government House his Excellency and party drove round the city, and returned to the Lieutenant-Governor's by the mall or Anarkullee entrance. The road approaching the Lieutenant-Governor's was lined on each side by the troops of the Meean Meer garrison and the 4th Punjab Infantry. At the chief entrance to Government House the Lahore foot volunteers were drawn up as a guard-of-honour to receive his Excellency. The Viceroy occupied the afternoon in receiving and returning the private visits of the Rajahs of Kappurthalla and Ferozkot, and in visiting the Government College and the Missionary School. A drive to the Shalimar Gardens in the evening closed the day's proceedings. Early this morning his lordship rode through the city, entering it by the Delhi Gate and visiting the Fort. He afterwards visited the Mayo hospital, and in the evening drove out to Meean Meer to see the cantonments. Some good result may possibly be looked for in the Viceroy's visit to Meean Meer, which has lately suffered so severely from cholera, and which continues to exist as a garrison for European troops notwithstanding the many objections that are urged against it in regard to its liability to epidemics of the worst kind, and its general unsuitableness as a military station. The experiments of the past few years in this cantonment have almost unquestionably demonstrated that, even with a superior system of sanitation, it will still be subject to dangerous malarial conditions, and the only one remedy therefore that remains, is to abandon it altogether as unfit for the habitation of the European soldier.

The progress in the reconstruction of the break in the Sutlej bridge seems to be slow. It is said that the current is still so strong that it is almost impossible to carry on the work; and on the other hand there is a general outcry against the delay caused by the non-arrival of the necessary iron and permanent way material from England. There is no doubt that as long as such a break exists, the pecuniary loss involved to the traffic of the line must be very great.

His Excellency leaves for Ferozepore to-morrow afternoon. It is reported, with what truth I know not, that one or two cases of cholera have recently occurred there.—Pioneer Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

DEATH FROM SUNSTROKE.—We regret to hear that Honorary Ensign M. Cunningham, Deputy Commissary Assistant Engineer, 2nd Grade Public Works Department, Hughli, died on Saturday last from the effects of sunstroke.—Englishman, Oct. 22.

A ROYAL AUTHOR.—The Rampore Nawab has gone in vigorously for all the honours of authorship and a literary reputation. Not many days ago we announced the publication by him of the work of a rare Persian poet, which he had himself edited. We learn now that he has launched a "Lamentation"—Taravai Ghum. The style and subject are much lauded by scholars. Sir William Muir has expressed high approval of the work.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 17.

INDIGO.—Bengal was expected to turn out a total of 1,25,000 to 1,31,100 maunds of Indigo about a fortnight ago. It was estimated by Messrs. J. Thomas and Co. that the different districts would produce as follows:—Lower Bengal from 45,000 to 46,000 mds.; Moughyr 3,500; Tirhoot 27,000; Chuprah 12,000; Chumparun 12,000. Besides this it was computed that the Benares Provinces might be credited with from 10,000 to 12,000 mds. and the Doab with from 16,000 to 18,000.—Bengal Times.

MEERUT.—The whole of the troops who left Meerut for the cholera camp have now returned to cantonment. The last detachment of the Royal Artillery and 105th Light Infantry came in on the 7th. They had been free of cholera for about ten days previously. They had, however, suffered considerably from dengue.

GREEN TEA.—From the Mowdie Hill and Ramghur gardens, Hazaribagh, ninety chests of green tea have lately been sold in Calcutta at a general average rate of one rupee and three annas per pound. Teas this season, whether from their superior quality, or owing to an unusual demand in the home market for Bengal growth, have fetched splendid prices at auction, as well as at private sales.—Bengal Times, Oct. 16.

BITEN BY A MONKEY.—An officer of the 26th Cameronians at Fyzabad met with a singular and very serious accident last week. He was leading a tame monkey by a string tied around its neck, and was walking quietly along, when the little brute suddenly sprang at him and inflicted several deep bites on his knee. For some days the gentleman's life was despaired of, but his symptoms are better, and hopes of recovery are entertained.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 22.

THE HEALTH OF THE PUNJAB.—We regret to see by the Sanitary Commissioner's report for the end of September, that cholera is said to be spreading through the villages of Hazara, a district which has hitherto remained free from the disease. When we note that deaths from cholera are decreasing all over the province, we must also call attention to the fact that this does not mean the country in the month is getting healthier.

MOHAMMEDAN LITERATURE.—Unusual energy is being displayed by the Mohammedans of the North-Western Provinces in providing for their own use educational books in the Arabic language. During the past year no fewer than twenty-three thousand copies or parts of the Koran were printed, an immense number considering that the demand for general literature is so slight. Nineteen Arabic Grammars and seven Treatises on Logic, averaging a thousand copies each, were also printed.

DROWNED.—On last Wednesday night Mr. E. F. Witting, in command of the flat Mullah, accidentally fell overboard, and was drowned. It appeared that the deceased was amusing himself by walking on the edge of the deck outside the rail, lost his balance, and fell into the water. Though known to be a good swimmer he never rose to the surface; the probability is that he was carried away by the under-current. The police boats have been on the look out since Thursday morning for the body, which has not turned up as yet. The flat was at anchor at Sulkeeah when the accident occurred.—Englishman, Oct. 12.

CACHAR TEA.—At the auction sales of Bengal tea held in Calcutta on the 23rd, 25th, and 28th September, 5,225 chests were offered, of which 4,895 found purchasers. We observe the Durrum Khallgarden, in a break of seventy-six chests average sixteen annas and eight pie; Coocheela in a break of 8 realised 16-6; and Silcoorie, disposing of 189 chests, obtained 15-8. These were the highest averages. It has been a subject of general remark how admirably the gardens of Messrs. Jardine, Skinner and Co. have done this year. We heartily congratulate all the managers of estates who have succeeded in this most trying enterprise, since we are well aware that success can follow only where unwearied energy, undaunted perseverance, and great skill and intelligence lead the way.

A DANGEROUS CUSTOMER.—On Sunday, the 20th October, a mahout or elephant-driver, having trespassed on some zemindar's land, cut off a great load of pepu tree branches for fodder for the elephant, and was in the act of binding it on the elephant's back when the owner of the tree detected him, and commenced showering abuse on the trespasser. The elephant suddenly took his master's part, attacked the zemindar, and before any assistance could be rendered killed the owner of the tree. It is dangerous to permit such animals into populated towns, and far more so to permit their being located within the Kaisur Bagh buildings. Herds of cattle of every description are of late located in the small space between Neil's Gate and the Deputy Commissioner's Office, to the danger of the public.—Lucknow Times, Oct. 23.

A CURIOUS ACCIDENT.—The Simla correspondent of the Delhi Gazette says:—A singular accident happened to a gentleman the other day. He was cutting a pear or an apple, when he accidentally wounded one of his fingers on the left hand. The blood flowing rather freely he passed his hand through some grass in order to brush it off; the next day the finger swelled and the swelling proceeded up his arm, affecting the whole arm to the shoulder; he thought nothing of it till on the third day the whole arm pained so much that he began to be alarmed, and sought medical advice; the doctor informed him that he had been poisoned by some poisonous shrub that he must have touched when he passed his hand through the grass. Severe remedial measures were at once resorted to; incisions were made in the arm and hand and medicine introduced to counteract the effect of the poison, and eventually a portion of the diseased finger was cut off, mortification having commenced, since which there is every appearance of a cure being effected, though it will take some time before the patient will be safe. The incident shows what small causes may bring about the most serious results.

DEATH OF MR. BIDDER.—We regret to hear of the death of Mr. E. Bidder, the engineer who had charge of the erection of the Beas temporary bridge. He recently took short sick leave to Dalhousie, but became worse after returning to the plains, and died on the 16th instant at Lahore, after a very painful illness.—Punjab Times, Oct. 18.

HASSAN ABDAL.—All the newspapers miscall the place chosen for the Punjab autumn manœuvres. Husson Abdool is an impossible name in that shape. We find Abdool rahceem, the servant of the Merciful, Abdullah, but this should be Hasan Abdal, Hasan the Abdal. An "Abdal" is a Mahomedan saint of high dignity who possesses certain miraculous powers, for instance, that of walking upon water. It is supposed that there are always forty of these wonderful personages, but we cannot say who Hasan Abdal was or when he lived. The word Abdal is from the root badal, which means change, and is in common use in Hindoostani.—Indian Public Opinion.

MODERN EFFEMINACY.—In Cannanore, the Bangalore Herald informs us, the sepoys walk about with umbrellas in full uniform, knapsack and all, and what is worse, appear to be under the impression they will be allowed when the time comes to carry the umbrellas into action. "Ought they," remarks our contemporary, "not to be disillusioned on that point? This reminds us of an old practice in vogue years ago in Bengal, of officers commanding companies going to parade with an orderly carrying two bricks for them to stand on whilst putting their men through the manual and platoon exercise. The order, we believe, is still extant directing officers to discontinue the practice as unmilitary and unsoldier like. Is not the sight of sepoys in full uniform walking about with cotton umbrellas to protect them from the heat of the sun equally unmilitary and old womanish?"

TO CALCUTTA BY THE CANAL.—The Windsor Castle, Captain Howson, a splendid new canal steam vessel of the "Castle" line of Messrs. Donald Currie and Co., arrived in the Hooghly, at the end of last week, with cargo and passengers. The interesting problem involved in these Canal vessels, and their future influence on the carrying trade between England and India, gives to each new comer a natural welcome; and in this case there is an especial interest in the arrival. The Windsor Castle left England on September 12th, was at Suez, without "touching" in the Canal, on September 26th, at Ceylon on October 9th, and reached the Hooghly on October 16th; a passage from England to Calcutta, including all stoppages, of 34 days—the shortest passage ever made. This may well cause the P. and O. Company to look to its laurels. After such a run the return freight of course was certain, and we believe the vessel may be laden as fast as the work can be done.—Friend of India, Oct. 25.

IRRIGATION IN THE N. W. PROVINCES.—We see, from the latest returns, that the area of land in the North-Western Provinces irrigated during the past year was 852,489 acres only, as compared with 1,050,805 acres in 1870-71. The gross revenue was Rs. 21,75,733, as compared with Rs. 25,51,169. This diminution was distributed almost equally through all the districts, and was owing to the favourable rainfall. Regarding these results the resolution of the local Government says:—"The revenue for the year amounted to Rs. 21,75,733, which is less than it has been since 1866-67; but it is still slightly in excess of the revenue of that year, which was itself, in comparison with the previous history of irrigation in these provinces, a remarkably favourable season for the canals. The area irrigated this year is 100,000 acres less than it was in 1866-67; the increased revenue is accordingly due to the superior staples irrigated, these paying at higher rates. Upon the whole, then, although the season, having been singularly favourable for agricultural operations, has made the results appear less promising when contrasted with the years of drought and partial rain preceding it, still the results now recorded are not unpromising of future progress."

IN MEMORIAM.—We have the sad duty this week of recording the death of Mrs. Stephenson, wife of the Rev. J. Stephenson, Chaplain of St. John's, which took place on Saturday, October 5. Our last number contained a notice of the birth of her son, and it was thought she was progressing most favourably towards recovery, when she was suddenly attacked by puerperal fever, a disease very rare in India, but very fatal wherever it occurs. During a residence of nearly six years in Calcutta, Mrs. Stephenson laboured hard in that earnest but unostentatious way which marks the true woman. At first she turned her attention towards the House of Industry, and her visits there were regular and frequent. Soon after, she was mainly instrumental in the establishment of a working class for poor women, a branch of usefulness in which she had had some experience when in Madras. This class has been continued up to the present time, with constantly increasing success. The number of women who at first joined it was only twelve, now it is no less than ninety, and a corresponding increase has taken place in the amount earned by the workers. Mrs. Stephenson was also a diligent collector for the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in connection with the St. John's Parochial Association. She raised in this way for the venerable society an amount very little short of Rs. 1,000—a noble example of what quiet perseverance can effect.—Indian Church Gazette, Oct. 12.

Madras.

IN MEMORIAM.—The money, Rs. 840, collected at the offertories in the Madras churches on the day of thanksgiving for the recovery of the Prince of Wales has been devoted to the General Hospital for the purchase of books, book cases, pictures, &c. A ward in the hospital has also been named after the Prince of Wales.

THE FLOODS AT CUTTACK.—The thanks of H.E. the Governor-General in Council and of his Honour the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal have been communicated through the Madras Government to Colonel Luard, commanding the 41st Madras N.I. at Cuttack, for the exertions of the officers and men in affording assistance to the Engineering Department in July last when the safety of the town of Cuttack was so seriously endangered by floods.

ENGLISH ENERGY AT ELORE.—The late floods at Ellore, remarks the Pioneer, will supply the Secretary of State for India with a typical instance of the value of Europeans in subordinate appointments. The river at Ellore rose, flooded the canal, and then the town; but before all the ruin that threatened could be worked, a young European inspector of police, Mr. Prendergast, breached the canal and let the water out. This of course was not his duty, but he saw the danger, and in a critical hour took the responsibility upon himself for extreme measures. The duty was the civil officer's; but he was away at the time, so it devolved upon the tehseldar, a native. But this individual, when appealed to by the public, refused to do anything—he could not, he said, “take responsibility upon himself.”

DENGUE AT TRICHINOPOLY.—It is a fact that dengue was so bad last month at Trichinopoly that the Locomotive Superintendent of the Great Southern of India Railway wrote as follows to the agent:—“If our drivers get it we shall have to stop work. I have had five applicants for employ during the last fortnight, two of them qualified to work engines. I am sending two fitters from here to keep going. If they get dengue or small-pox I don't know what I shall do. We shall come to a stand if reasonable latitude is not given to us to employ what labour we consider needed.” The matter was so serious that it was referred to Government, and the Consulting Engineer had to authorise Mr. Betts, by telegraph, to “engage extra hands when emergently required to meet casualties among the permanent employees.”

MILITARY.—Major-General Sir A. T. Wilde, K.C.B., C.S.I., returns to his old appointment of Military Secretary to the Madras Government. A change for the better was offered to him, but he declined it on the score of ill-health. Colonel Silver, on the return of Sir A. Wilde, will revert to the post of Superintendent of Army Clothing. As Major-General Wilde has (says the Madras Mail) refused the Hyderabad command, it will probably now be given to Major-General Blake, commanding in Burmah. This move would of course give promotion in the list of Brigadiers. Brigadier-General Woods, C.S.I., commanding the Ceded Districts, is the senior, and will probably succeed General Blake in Burmah. The Brigadier-General Macintire, commanding at Trichinopoly, will get a first-class brigade. Colonel Crawford Cooke, late Quarter Master General, Colonel E. A. H. Webb, C.S.I., and Colonel Silver, Acting Military Secretary to Government, stand next on the list for promotion, and doubtless one of these officers will be the new Brigadier.

CIVIL.—The Madras Mail has good reason to believe that the following appointments have been resolved upon:—The Honourable R. S. Ellis, C.B., Chief Secretary, to be a member of the Executive Council of the Government of Madras; the Honourable William Hudleston, Secretary to Government in the Revenue Department, to be Chief Secretary; the Honourable J. R. Kindersley, Acting Judge of the High Court, to be Revenue Secretary to Government; Mr. J. J. Minchin, Collector and Magistrate of Vizagapatam, to be Collector, Magistrate, and Government Agent of Tanjore; Mr. D. F. Carmichael, Acting Third Member of the Board of Revenue, Madras, to be Madras representative in the Viceregal Legislative Council, Calcutta; Mr. R. A. Dalrymple, on special duty, to be Acting Third Member of the Board of Revenue. The expected retirement of Mr. G. L. Morris will give a pukka collectorate to Mr. R. W. Barlow, who is at present Acting Collector of Chingleput, an appointment which, by all accounts, he is likely to retain.

A RIVAL TO THE BOMBAY MUNICIPALITY.—Bangalore will soon rival Bombay in municipal extravagance. There are about 60,000 or 70,000 inhabitants in the town who contribute one lakh and Rs. 7,000 towards the maintenance of a municipality. Of this sum Rs. 66,500 are paid for general establishment, and Rs. 23,000 alone go towards the salaries of the president of the commission, the engineer, assessor, sudder amin, vital statistical officer, and miscellaneous, to say nothing of supervision of conservancy, lighting, drainage, sewage farms, and the thousand and one departments connected with a municipal corporation. There is a talk of levying additional taxes, and there is also a talk that a strong but respectful representation will be made to the Chief Commissioner of Mysore of the excessive sums paid away to men who do but little towards the proper conduct of municipal affairs. The town of Bangalore, in the opinion of most people, should be worked, as most Mofussil municipalities are, with an honorary president and commissioners and with a paid sanitary officer. This arrangement will prevent the levy of additional taxes which are so unpalatable to the people who pay enough for the sanitation and lighting of the town.—Madras Standard.

KILLING A NATIVE.—We are informed that Nesserwanjee Framjee, the well-known manager of the “Frere Arms” Hotel at Bhosawul, is at present on trial there before Mr. Reid, the F.P. magistrate of that portion of the district, for causing the death of a native by severely beating him, as mentioned in our news-letter the other day.—Times of India.

STATION TALK.

JACOBABAD, Oct. 7.—The Khan of Khelat has left Khelat for Cutchee, from which place he will move on to Jacobabad when apprised of the Viceroy's approach to that place. The Bolan Pass is impassable, owing to the Murrees holding it. They seem inclined to break their agreement with Captain Sandeman. The village of Shapoor, forty miles from here, has been pillaged by them; they carried off nearly all the cattle and other valuables, even taking away with them fowls. The authorities here, on hearing of the outrage, sent forty men of the Sind Horse. Unfortunately the country between Jacobabad and Shapoor was under water, which greatly impeded their progress. Their assistance was too late, as the hill-men had taken to the hills. They barter their plunder, and if possible for money, which helps towards the payment of the instalment to make good what they have previously stolen from the kaffilas. Strange rumours reach us of Yacoub Khan, Governor of Herat—that he is about entering into an alliance with the Khan of Khelat—with what intention I do not know, but it is likely to give his brother, the Governor of Khandahar, petty annoyance. The Governor of Khandahar is said to have refused to make advances of money to Yacoub Khan. The late Governor, Shere Ali Khan, used to honour drafts from the Herat Governor, which practice involved him in trouble, and was one of the very particular reasons why he was removed by the Ameer. This refusal has no doubt given greater annoyance to Yacoub Khan. At present Yacoub Khan is not in favour with the Ameer. His Highness has had cause for dissatisfaction from the attitude lately assumed by Yacoub Khan. The Sukkur Municipality are making preparations for a suitable reception of his Excellency the Viceroy, who will arrive there on or about the Dewallee. The native merchants propose to have a grand show of fireworks.

KHANDEISH, DHULIA, Oct. 11.—This station has been cast into gloom by the untimely death of Mr. Francis Thelwall, late 1st Assistant Collector and Magistrate here, which melancholy occurrence took place in the afternoon of the 9th inst., after a brief illness. His remains were conducted to the grave by a carrying party of the 17th N.I., kindly told off for this duty by Colonel Thompson and the officers of the 17th N.I., while a guard of the Poona Irregular Horse was stationed at the cemetery gate to keep back the rabble who usually congregate on such occasions. The Protestant residents of the place are indebted to Captain Owen for this last courtesy. Mr. Thelwall's remains were accompanied to the grave by all the European residents, military and civil, and some of the higher Parsee and native officials also attended out of respect to the deceased gentleman's memory. The funeral service was read by the Rev. Mr. Roberts, of Malligaum. There are few things, I fancy, that affect a rightly-constituted mind so much as that masterpiece of English composition, the Protestant funeral service, which, when read with the usual concomitants of a funeral and the solemnity and impressiveness of the language was, I need scarcely say, done full justice to by Mr. Roberts. There were few, I imagine, who could have left the cemetery last evening without pondering sincerely on the uncertainty of human life. Although but a short time in the district, Mr. Thelwall had by his ability, energy, and independence won the esteem and confidence of those who came in contact with him. He was also known to be painstaking and impartial. The service has really lost an able man by Mr. Thelwall's death.

BHOWNUGGUR, Oct. 8.—Another triumph, as triumphs go in Kattyawar, has been scored by the soldiers of this State. The celebrated outlaw, Nagjee, was slain on the 4th inst. after a desperate encounter between nearly equal numbers. It appears that, accompanied by fourteen or fifteen Juts from Jutwar, he had been lying for some days in concealment near a village close to Rungpoor in the direction of Dhundooka, engaged in looking about for a likely village to loot. Here one of his own spies betrayed him to Joga Gowalia, a Katee vassal of Bhownuggur, who making a sudden night march of upwards of twenty-six kos, accompanied by a dozen of his own kinsmen, two other Katees, and a couple of matchlockmen from Ningala post, came upon him in the morning twilight just before dawn. Nagjee had the advantage of position, being posted in some milkbush hedges across a nulla, and his men were all provided with firearms, he himself carrying a first-rate English double-barrelled rifle. But his people were surprised and just aroused from sleep, and some, of course, were in that helpless condition which all opium-eaters are in before taking their customary dose. On the other hand, the Gowalias were picked men, nearly all of one family, fully prepared and splendidly mounted, but they were armed only with swords and the short, heavy, and useless lance, half spear, half javelin, which Katees affect, and of the two matchlockmen who accompanied them one exhibited such cowardice as to render him utterly useless. Nagjee himself was the first to perceive the hostile horsemen endeavouring to steal across the nulla, and gave the alarm by firing a shot, which passed through the body of Bokha Gowalia, the brother of the leader, who immediately fell from his horse. His partisans, foolishly enough, instead of galloping forward, grouped anxiously around him, when a second discharge from the other barrel of Nagjee's rifle (Nagjee was a noted marksman) wounded another Gowalia called Merum severely in the side. But Bokha, although mortally wounded, retained sufficient presence of mind to order his people to "leave him, and not to return without Nagjee's head;" and feeling that they had no chance, except at close quarters, they charged furiously across the nulla. The outlaws were by this time on their guard, and as the Kates crossed, they were received with a matchlock fire which would have been deadly but for the faint light, and, as it was, proved fatal only to two of their horses. After the first-fire, however, the surprised and dismounted robbers could do nothing against the swords of the horsemen. Five or six were slain, two severely wounded, as many more taken prisoners, and the rest made their escape in all directions. Nagjee himself endeavoured to re-load his rifle as he fled, doubling and turning round a milk bush. He succeeded in loading one barrel, but before he could exp it, two or three of the Gowalias were upon him, and he had to drop it and take to his sword. Then, while two others engaged him in front, Joga jumping from his horse stole up behind, and clasped him round the waist. Still Nagjee hacked desperately at Joga's hands, and succeeded in cutting off some of his fingers, but a couple of lance-thrusts ended his struggles, and his head being cut off was carried to Bokha Gowalia, who died soon after.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

THE VIENNA EXHIBITION.—J. Brandenburgh (of Messrs. Bell, Brandenburgh and Co.), Acting Consul-General in India for Austro-Hungary, has been appointed by H. E. the Governor a member of the Bombay Committee on the Vienna Exhibition.

JUDICIAL.—The Sindian says, it is rumoured that Mr. Phillpotts, Judge and Sessions Judge of Hyderabad is likely to be transferred to another appointment, and that Mr. Scott, C.S., at present at Shikarpore, will probably be sent to Hyderabad.

COTTON.—The quantity of raw cotton imported into Bombay by sea during the week ending 12th October amounted to 2,557½ cwts.; the quantity imported by water amounted, during weeks ending 8th and 16th October, to 2,356 cwts. in the former week, and 1,999 cwts. in the latter; total 4,355 cwts. for the two weeks.

KHANDESH.—We hear that it is in contemplation to widen when rebuilding the streets of towns and villages in Khandesh that were destroyed by the recent floods; and that a committee in connection with this duty at Dhulia has already commenced their labours of survey and plan. This is a step in the right direction, and we shall not err in attributing it to the thoughtful foresight of the present collector, Mr. J. H. Grant.

NEEMUCH STATE RAILWAY.—From Indore we learn that Mr. Miller, superintending engineer, Neemuch State Railway, has returned from Simla, and that Government have sanctioned that line. The works will be commenced as soon as the contracts have been made, and continued as far as Neemuch. The engineering difficulties are comparatively slight, and the earthworks will soon be completed. The estimates and plans have all been approved, and tenders will be advertised for at once.

HYDRABAD, SIND.—Dengue still prevailing in the city of Haidarabad. Whole families are laid up, and the Civil Surgeon, Dr. Holmestead, has so much to do in consequence that he has hardly time to attend to his European patients. The fever has now made its appearance amongst the Christian inhabitants. Mr. O'Dea, of the Public Works Department, was the first European who was down with it; then followed Mr. LeMessurier, of the Settlement Department, and now we hear that Mr. Patton, the Hoozoor Deputy Collector, is laid up.—Sindian, Oct. 19.

DISTRESS AT RUTNAGHERY.—About a fortnight ago the Times of India in a paragraph said that the severity of the distress in the Rutnagherry Collectorate had been exaggerated, and now we see the Pioneer repeats the assertion of the Times. As the fact of there being scarcity in the Rutnagherry Collectorate was first brought to the notice of the public in the columns of the Bombay Gazette, we presume it is the Bombay Gazette's article which is said to have exaggerated the distress; but we have the best authority for saying that the distress was very severe and was by no means exaggerated in our article.—Bombay Gazette, Oct. 21.

THE GUJARAT IRRIGATION PROJECT.—The Supreme Government having accorded its sanction to the Gujarat irrigation project, Mr. Clarke, the executive engineer in charge, has pushed on the preparation for the commencement of the work with activity. The village of Kamlapore in the Mandvie district has been fixed upon as the principal station for the commencement of the operations. The river Taptee being very narrow there, a dam, about twenty-seven feet high and running along either banks, will be constructed near the place. Two canals will be cut out from this dam, the smaller of which will run to Amrolee, and thence water will be conveyed to Surat by pipes. The other canal is intended to be big enough to hold a sailing vessel. This will cross the railway line some ten miles distant from Surat, and shall meet the sea on the western side.—Gujarat Mitra.

MILITARY.—The following additional items of military movements arising out of the arrangements for the Viceroy's visit to Bombay, though entirely "unauthorised," are not, we believe, altogether so "inaccurate" as the absence of that element seems to some minds to imply:—The headquarters wing of the 17th Regt. N.I., from Dhoolia, and a wing of the 26th Regt. N.I., from Surat, will be brought down by rail to Bombay so as to arrive on the 12th prox. for duty on account of the approaching visit of H.E. the Viceroy and Governor-General of India.—The body-guard of H.E. the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, consisting of fifty-one troopers under command of a European officer, is expected to be in Bombay from Umballa on the 2nd proximo.—H.M.S. Dalhousie, Capt. E. Warner, will probably leave on the 28th with stores for Kurrachee, where, in due time, H.E. the Viceroy will embark on board of her for his voyage to Bombay. The despatch boat May Frere is also to be sent by the marine authorities to Kurrachee on the 4th or 5th.—Times of India, Oct. 28.

THE RAJPOOTANA BATTA FUND.

As it has lately been discovered that some officers have retained in their hands certain sums without exhibiting them in the public accounts, the undersigned has the honour to republish, for general information and guidance, the subjoined resolution of the Government of India in the Financial Department, No. 14624, dated Dec. 10, 1861:—

"From correspondence that has lately passed between the Foreign Department and the agent governor general for the States of Rajpootana, it appears that for upwards of a quarter of a century a fund, called the Batta Fund, has been in existence in the Mhairwarra District, the money belonging to which remained in the hands of the treasurer of the deputy commissioner of that district, without being exhibited in any shape whatever in the public accounts. To prevent such irregular proceedings, H.E. the Gov. gen. of India in Council directs all officers of Government to bear in mind that all transactions to which they, in their official character, are parties, must, in future, without any reservation, be brought to account, and all moneys be deposited in the Government Treasuries."

INVALIDS.—COMMANDS.

With reference to G.O. 263 of 1869, the C. in C. in India is pleased to publish the following rules for the command of troops proceeding to England on board H.M.'s Indian troopships:—

Whenever a regiment, or the headquarters of a brigade of artillery, or a regiment and battery, embark on board a troopship, with other details, the senior officer in command of such a brigade, regiment, or battery, if of the rank of a field officer, will, as a general rule, be appointed to command the whole.

In the case of detachments of regiments, invalids, or time-expired men proceeding in the transports, either together or separately, the C. in C. of the Bombay army will be good enough to select from amongst the field officers proceeding to England on sick leave, or on duty, or on private affairs, such officer as he may consider best fitted for the responsible duty; a preference being given, when possible, to the two first classes.

In both cases, should there be on board an officer senior to the one selected for command, he will be looked upon in the light of a passenger only; he will not be considered on duty, and will not be empowered to interfere in any way with the command of the troops.

Such men will be dealt with under the instructions issued from the Qrmr. general's department.

All other men present with their regiments, and able to embark, suffering from disease or disability which would necessitate their being invalided if their regiments were not going to England, will accompany their corps and be brought before invaliding boards at Home.

H.E. the C. in C. of the Bombay Presidency is requested to cause any men of these regiments, whose fitness for the Suez route may have become doubtful after departure from their stations, to appear before medical boards at Bombay, in view to their being detained till late in the season, when the period for arrival at home will be more suitable for men in a weakly state of health. OUR COMMISSIONER AT ZANZIBAR.

Sir Henry Bartle Edward Frere, K.C.B., who is appointed Commissioner from England for the suppression of the Slave trade at and around Zanzibar, is one of the most eminent of the civil servants of the old East India Company. The fifth son of Edward and Mary Frere, he was born at Llanelly, in the county of Brecon, on the 29th of March, 1815. His paternal grandfather, Mr. Frere, was Paley's rival for the Senior Wranglership at Cambridge in 1763, and afterwards M.P. for Norwich, and his uncle was the late eminent scholar, John Hookham Frere, the friend of Canning. He was educated at King Edward's Grammar-school, at Bath, and subsequently at Haileybury College, to which he was nominated by the late Mr. William Astell, M.P. Here, at his former school, he showed much promise of future distinction; and when he left Haileybury, in 1834, he carried off with him medals in law and mathematics, and prizes for two essays as well as in classical studies and political economy. He went to India the same year, and, we believe, was the first civil servant of the Company who reached his destination without rounding the Cape of Good Hope. As it was, he encountered many dangers and difficulties in crossing the desert and coasting the Red Sea; and when he and his companions reached Bombay in September they were in a state not far short of starvation. Three months after landing at Bombay he passed in Hindustanee; and having passed subsequently in the Mahratta and other languages, he was appointed, by Lord Clare, to an Assistant Collectorship at Poonah. Having subsequently travelled over nearly the whole of the Bombay Presidency, in 1842 he was appointed private secretary to the Governor, the late Sir George Arthur, whose second daughter he subsequently married. Returning after furlough to India in 1846, we find him sent by Sir George Clerk to succeed Sir James Outram as President at Sattara. When the Rajah of that place died, and the State of Sattara came into the hands of the British Government, he was appointed Commissioner to Scinde. During 1855-57 he was in Europe for the benefit of his health, and on returning to India in the latter year he learnt the tidings of the Mutiny. He at once sent off a regiment to secure Mooltan, and a steamer to divert to Calcutta some other troops which were returning to Scinde from the Persian Gulf. Other forces he despatched to the Punjab and Delhi, leaving only 178 European bayonets to face a mutiny which was breaking out on every side, and to hold in check a Mahomedan population of a million and a half. The outbreak in Scinde itself was quelled by the aid of the loyal native troops, and all the mutineers were duly tried and punished by native courts-martial. In 1858 Sir Bartle Frere received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, and again in 1859, in which year he was also nominated a K.C.B., and appointed a member of the Governor-General Lord Canning's Council at Calcutta; he remained at Calcutta, acting as President, during the interval which occurred between the departure of Lord Canning and the arrival of Lord Elgin, and in 1862 he was nominated the successor of Sir George Clerk in the Governorship of Bombay. In 1861 he was further honoured by receiving the Star of India as a Knight Grand Cross of the order, and on his return home in 1867 he had conferred upon him the honorary degree of a Doctor of Civil Laws of Oxford in recognition of his Indian services. In Scinde it is a simple historical fact that he did much towards developing the resources of an important portion of our Indian Empire, where during his administration some 6,000 miles of roads were opened up, and a great work (called the "Supply Channel") was constructed in order to supply water to a network of canals extending 300 miles from the point where it leaves the Indus, and irrigating many thousands of square miles. He obtained the sanction of the Government for the construction of the Scinde Railway, and for a considerable grant of money for improving the beautiful harbour of Kurrachee. He was Governor of the Bombay Presidency for five years of unparalleled prosperity and adversity, as nearly as possible commensurate with the civil war in America. During that time the ramparts around Bombay were pulled down, the building the Deccan College, the Poonah Engineering College, the Elphinstone College, the Sassoon Hospital, and many other important public works were either begun or completed; the Bhor Ghat, Thull Ghat Incline, and Ahmedabad Railways were opened; and a municipality was organised for Bombay, which had become the largest city in the Empire next to London in point of population. This municipality, since its establishment in 1865, has been the means of reducing the mortality in that city from an average of 26,800 in the years 1864-65 to an average of 16,700 in the years 1868-69—in other words, saving about 10,000 lives per annum. It only remains to add that Sir Bartle Frere is a Vice-President of the Royal Geographical Society and of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts.

Miscellaneous.

CHAPLAINCY.—A chaplaincy in Bengal has been conferred upon the Rev. C. T. Fagan, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge, assistant curate of St. Mary's Church, Shrewsbury.

THE ORDER OF THE STAR OF INDIA.—(INDIA OFFICE, Nov. 15).—The Queen has been graciously pleased to nominate and appoint Captain Charles Bean Smith, Madras Infantry, lately employed (with local rank of major) on special duty in Mekran and Seistan, to be a Companion of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.

LETTERS FOR PASSENGERS VIA BRINDISI.—As the non-receipt at Brindisi of letters from home often causes annoyance to passengers proceeding to the East by the Italian route, we think it well to notify that although the Indian mail does not leave London until Friday evening, letters intended to catch passengers at Brindisi should be posted by Wednesday evening at latest.

INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.—Notice has been given that a competitive examination for sixteen appointments as assistant surgeons in the Indian medical service will be held in London in February. Candidates must be between the ages of twenty-two and twenty-eight, and must possess a diploma in surgery, as well as a degree in medicine. Applications for permission to compete are to be addressed to Major General Sir T. T. Pears, Military Secretary to the India Office.

INDIAN CADETS.—Of the 401 Queen's and Indian Cadets and successful Direct Commission candidates at the examination held in 1870, 236 have up to the present time received commissions; 11 have withdrawn their names, and 2 have died, thus leaving 167 to be provided for. Of those gazetted to commissions, 6 have gone to the Household Cavalry, 59 to Cavalry of the Line, 9 to the Brigade of Guards, 151 to the Infantry of the Line and Rifle Brigade, 9 to the Colonial Corps, and 9 to the Control Department.

ARMY SIGNALLING.—The following officers have arrived at Chatham to undergo a course of instruction in army signalling and telegraphy:—Capt. Wall, Bombay Staff Corps; Capt. E. Wells, Bengal Cavalry; Capt. Vere Holloway, Bengal Staff Corps; Capt. Jones, Indian Army; Major Hand, 82nd Regt.; Capt. Trench, 1st Dragoons; Capt. Brander, 1st Bat. 24th Regt.; Lieut. Miles, 101st Regt.; Lieut. Lowndes, 93rd Regt.; Lieut. Tarleton, 1st Bat. 16th Regt.; Lieut. Eustace, 98th Regt.; and Lieut. Bamber, Royal Marines.

PROPOSED AMALGAMATION OF EASTERN TELEGRAPH LINES.—Mr. Ford, in the course of some very lengthened remarks made at the recent meeting of the China and Submarine Telegraph Company, advocated the policy of an amalgamation of this company with the British-Indian Extension and the Australian lines. The Chairman, in reply, said the board fully concurred in the views expressed by the honourable proprietor in regard to this matter, but that the carrying out of such a scheme was a question of time. The motion was then put, and unanimously carried.

THE WILL OF LIEUTENANT-GENERAL SIR ISAAC CAMPBELL COFFIN, K.C.S.I., who died on October 6, at St. John's Park, Blackheath, was proved on October 25, under £14,000, by his widow, Dame Catherine Eliza Cotton, his brother-in-law (George Hutchinson Shepherd), and his son-in-law (W. M. Stewart), the executors. The widow gets the household furniture, a legacy of £1,000, and the income of one-third of the residue for life: and, subject thereto, the whole of testator's property is given to or for the benefit of his five children and their children.

A STRANGE DISCOVERY.—The variableness of our English climate is universally known and admitted, but it will surprise most people to learn that it has one constant feature, which is that it is always colder on Sundays than on any of the other six days constituting the week. We are indebted for this discovery to our military rulers, who have taken prompt measures to utilise it by directing that the comfortable, flannel-lined tunic shall be worn by soldiers on that day only; the light and airy serge frock being obviously more suited for the warmer week days, for which it is therefore reserved. The increased wear and tear of the costly biennial garment is to be balanced by restrictions on its use in some other directions not yet determined, but it may perhaps eventually be decided to substitute the serge frock for the tunic on summer field-days and guard-mountings, although this is a point requiring much consideration.—Broad Arrow.

OUR TRADE WITH INDIA.—The Board of Trade returns show that in the first three-quarters of the year 1872 the merchandise imported into the United Kingdom from British India reached the declared value of £26,977,586, and the exports of British and Irish produce and manufactures to British India were of the declared value of £14,153,105; making a total trade of £41,130,691, which almost approaches four-tenths of our trade with all the British possessions, and is equal to about the eleventh part of our trade with all the world beyond the seas. If we include the trade with the Straits Settlements and Ceylon, our imports are raised to £32,126,152, and our exports to £16,689,589, and the total to £48,815,842, which is not very far from a ninth part of our trade with all the world. In the period referred to—viz., the first three-quarters of this year—we imported from India 3,297,386 cwts. of raw cotton, of the value of £10,849,429, and we exported to India (including the Straits Settlements and Ceylon) cotton piece goods to the value of £10,236,492, a sum nearly equal to the value of the entire import thence of the raw material; besides an export of cotton yarn and twist of the value of £1,554,346. These figures relate only to merchandise; the bullion and specie returns show a remittance to Egypt of silver bullion of the value of £4,550,608, chiefly for India.

STAFF COLLEGE.—The results of the recent examinations for entrance to the Staff College are highly creditable to the officers of the two Ordnance corps. Here we have the first nine places occupied by representatives of the Artillery and Engineers, whilst the eleventh, twelfth, and fifteenth are also in the hands of the Woolwich men. It is to be regretted that no fewer than eight of these officers are prevented from pursuing the studies in anticipation of which they have been labouring. This is the first examination in which the Engineers have participated; but the position attained by their representatives is alike honourable to the officers themselves and the corps in which they hold rank.

HINDU AND MOHAMMEDAN LAW.—At the recent examination of students of the Inns of Court, held at Lincoln's-Inn Hall, the Council of Legal Education awarded to the following students certificates that they have satisfactorily passed an examination in Hindu and Mahomedan law and the laws in force in British India:—Mr. Thomas Joseph Greenfield, student of Gray's-inn; Mr. James Keith Grosjean, Mr. Ardesheer Byramjee Kapadia, Mr. Samuel Archibald Locke, Mr. Arthur Daniel Pollen, Mr. James de Ricci, Mr. Patrick Dunlop Shaw, and Mr. William Young, students of the Middle Temple; Mr. Pokala Venkatakrishnamma Naidu, Mr. Ivah Cumbumpati Sabapathi, Mr. George Serrell, and Mr. Arthur Weekes, students of Lincoln's-inn.

THE SUEZ CANAL COMPANY will continue to insist upon its recent advance of tolls, and declares that it will appeal to the decision of the Government. The Ottoman Porte has protested, by order of the Sultan, against the competency of the Tribunal de Commerce de la Seine to interpret the Act of Concession of the Canal—a power which belongs to itself alone. The Turkish Government also maintains that, the company being an Egyptian association, subject to the Ottoman jurisdiction, and having its head-quarters at Alexandria, cannot admit a foreign jurisdiction in respect to its differences with third parties. There is some idea of inviting the Maritime Powers to hold a conference at Constantinople, in order to agree upon a uniform system for the measurement of tonnage.

PURSEES OF THE LATE INDIAN NAVY.—The Pursees of the late Indian Navy have a complaint against the Government which has lasted for some years, but is not settled yet. They have not been placed in the class of pension to which they are entitled from length of service, notwithstanding that their claims to the higher rate have received the support of the Government of Bombay. The Secretary of State for India has, however, withheld his sanction, and though in one or two instances the officers of the late Indian Navy have been allowed more favourable terms than were at first granted them, the purseers still have their claims unsatisfied. They intend, nevertheless, still to press them, and to that end they have addressed another letter to the Secretary of State for India, from which we make the following extract, as it briefly explains their position:—“No grade of officers of the late Indian Navy met with such scant consideration on its abolition as that to which it was our misfortune to belong. In the despatch from the India Office, ordering the abolition of the service, favourable modifications of the Governor-General's pension scheme (a scheme roughly drawn as an estimate, without knowledge of individual services) were made in all the other grades, and a step in honorary rank granted to many officers on the commanders', lieutenants', and mates' lists. But for us was reserved the hard measure of no modification whatever of the original pension scheme, and the cruelty, vainly appealed against, of attaching to us for the remainder of our lives a title that had gradually become so odious in the Royal Navy, since the mutiny at the Nore, that after first mingling it with another it was at last entirely discarded, and which in general society we feel ashamed to acknowledge. Our pensions were allotted upon no intelligible principle, save that of avoiding trouble, it being incontestably less troublesome to divide a list into half-dozens and distribute pensions accordingly (as was done in our case) than to follow the practice of all other departments, of allotting pensions according to length of service. And as for bestowing honorary rank, or changing an odious title, or indeed doing anything to soften our compulsory retirement, not a thought seems to have been given in such a direction. To have conceded us the title of paymaster would have been carrying out the expressed policy of the late Court of Directors, to assimilate the service to the Royal Navy; it would have cost absolutely nothing, and yet it was refused.”

SCOTTISH AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.—The annual meeting was held in the Masonic Hall, George-street, Edinburgh, on the 6th inst.; Robert Hutchison, Esq., of Carlwrie, F.R.S.E., in the chair. A large number of new members were elected. The opening address was delivered by Dr. Cleghorn, of Stravithy, President for the ensuing year. The following is an abstract:—Dr. Cleghorn alluded to the beneficial effects of the maintenance of a due proportion of forest land in every country, from the shelter it gives to springs and protection from high winds, as well as the common belief that malaria and flights of locusts and noxious insects are often arrested by belts of forest. He then proceeded to sketch the evils that have followed the reckless cutting down of indigenous wood in many countries, where, only when it was too late, have measures been adopted by the Legislature for preserving the forests. He urged the necessity of prudence and caution in all operations which on a large scale interfere with the Creator's primeval arrangements of the organic and inorganic world. Our insular position, which enables us to import timber from all sides, and our supplies of coal, which have rendered us in great measure independent of vegetable fuel, have preserved our country from these evils in an aggravated form. He expressed the conviction that good might result from the present labour movement in the introduction of coal-cutting machinery, and the consequent diminution of the number of human beings employed underground, and in the needful economising of the backbone of our national wealth—our coal. Dr. Cleghorn described in general terms the working of the Forest Department in India, with which he was for many years connected. When he undertook the duty of superintending the forests in Madras, the natural woods in most parts of the country had been ruthlessly wasted by felling and burning; and no system had been adopted to regulate the cutting or to provide for the wants of future generations by preserving existing forests, or by forming new plantations. Magnificent trees were sacrificed for insignificant purposes, and plank were not sawn, but hewn with an axe, one tree furnishing a single plank. The initiatory duties were to ascertain the proprietary rights, if any existed, to mark out the first-class forests to be reserved by Government, to separate the tracts attached to villages, to frame leases with native chiefs, to establish and inspect depots for timber, to supply the Indian navy and other public works, and to arrange annual auctions for the general wants of the country. He then spoke of the advantages accruing to young men looking to the Forest Service in India from visiting countries where the forests are kept up by the State, and managed with a view to supplying future generations, and on a larger scale than from the circumstances of our country is possible in Britain. He concluded by remarking that, compared with that of other professions, the forest literature of England does not, perhaps, occupy so high a place as it might do, and he threw out a suggestion that a forest journal might ere long be advantageously maintained.

THE EUROPEAN BANK (LIMITED).—CLAIM OF THE AGRA AND MASTERMAN'S BANK.—This was an appeal from a decision of Vice-Chancellor Malins. The question was whether the Agra and Masterman's Bank were entitled to a general lien upon three bills of exchange deposited with them by the Oriental Commercial Bank, or whether the lien was limited to the balance due in respect of one particular transaction with the Oriental Commercial Bank. The bills in question were for £4,500, and were accepted by the European Bank for the accommodation of the Oriental Commercial Bank. In 1866, the Agra and Masterman's Bank had three accounts with the Oriental Commercial Bank, called the general account, the loan account, and the discount account. On the 4th of May, 1866, Demetrio Pappa, the manager of the Oriental Commercial Bank, sent the three bills in question for £4,500 (with other bills) to the Agra and Masterman's Bank in a letter in which he said:—“I am advised by our correspondents, Messrs. Felli A. Carrava, of Patras, that they have valued upon your bank for our account, and pursuant to an anteceded order of ours, for £10,500, by the drafts specified at foot, but, since by this time our credit with you will no longer afford a margin to that extent, I hasten to hand you, to hold by way of collateral security, the following bills.” The letter then specified, inter alia, the three bills for £4,500 accepted by the European Bank. The £10,500 was part of the loan account. The three banks being in liquidation, the Agra Bank received dividends from the European Bank on the three bills in question, and, by means of those dividends and in other ways, the balance due from the Oriental Commercial Bank to the Agra Bank upon the loan account was discharged. The question then arose whether the Agra Bank were entitled to receive any further dividends upon the three bills, in respect of a balance which remained due to them upon their general account with the Oriental Commercial Bank. The Vice-Chancellor decided that they were so entitled, and the liquidators of the European Bank appealed. Mr. Glasse, Q.C., and Mr. Graham Hastings, on behalf of the appellants, urged that by the letter of May 4, 1866, the three bills were specifically appropriated to the particular transaction, and that the bankers' general lien was excluded. Mr. Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Jackson appeared for the Agra Bank, but was not called upon to argue. Lord Justice James was of opinion that the Vice-Chancellor's order was quite right. If the matter had stood only upon the letter of May 4, 1866, possibly there might have been some ambiguity which would have entitled the European Bank to say to the Agra Bank, “These are simply accommodation bills. You never gave any value for them except by means of that particular transaction, and that value has been repaid.” But, looking at the books, it appeared that these different transactions between the Agra Bank and the Oriental Commercial Bank were never treated as really distinct matters. It was only for convenience that the loan account was kept separately. It was admitted by the appellants that these bills might have been applied to discharge the balance due upon the loan account. In truth, as between banker and customer, whatever number of accounts were kept, the whole was really but one account, and it could not be said that these bills were to be held only as security for the loan account. The appeal must be dismissed with costs. Lord Justice Mellish concurred.

THE EMPLOYMENT OF NATIVE FINANCIERS.

The Times declares that men not at all given to timidity look upon the financial position of India with anxiety, and, though fully admitting the wealth of the country and its capacity to yield large yearly sums to Government, they believe that taxation is not only becoming inordinately heavy, but that it is not imposed according to the wisest methods. It is true that Indian deficits are, speaking relatively, of no extravagant amount, and that the public debt of the Empire is not of any alarming magnitude. But there remains the unwelcome fact that we are straining ourselves in a time of peace, and that no further resource has been suggested by our statesmen beyond a tax which, even when kept down to an insignificant amount, has proved a cause of irritation and misgiving throughout the country. We send out men of great general ability, but not always skilled in the department of finance. Even when they possess this special knowledge it is in connection with European systems, and does not insure any real skill in raising Asiatic revenues. It is in accordance with what might be expected that a native financier conversant with the habits of his countrymen should be able to increase a revenue without pressing intolerably on the taxpayer, and it may be presumed that, were he transferred to the larger field of Imperial Indian finance, his suggestions would be similarly valuable. We know that the Mogul Emperors employed without hesitation the talents of their Hindoo subjects both in finance and war, and that more than one province was brought under obedience to Delhi by the abilities of a Hindoo General. Could we not take a lesson from such precedents? With regard to the general question as to the employment of natives in high stations, it can hardly be said to be any longer undecided. The equal rights of all subjects of the Queen were proclaimed fourteen years ago, and the principle is now fast developing into practice. All through India the Asiatic is taking a place which the Englishman would be powerless, if he were desirous, to refuse. Whatever prejudices may linger in Anglo-Indian breasts, the feeling of the nation at home is that India shall be governed not only for the benefit of its people, but also by their own leaders, so far as is consistent with the stability of the Administration. When the native statesmen of India are invested with a British Order of Knighthood, and native youths are invited to our Universities and our Inns of Court, a free and open official career can be no longer denied them.

MORSON'S EFFECTUAL REMEDIES

Are Sold by Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

PEPSINE.—The popular and professional medicine for Indigestion is MORSON'S PEPSEINE, the active principle of the gastric juice. In Powder, Lozenges, Globules, and as Wine.

CHLORODYNE has now obtained such universal celebrity it can scarcely be considered a speciality, its composition being known to most European practitioners. The combination of Chloroform quickly relieves the pain and spasms of Cholera, Diarrhoea, Dysentery, and in fact all acute and nervous pains, and chronic Coughs; frequently small doses will produce this beneficial result. Many of the Chlorodynes of commerce are not of uniform strength; this has induced MORSON and SON to compound their preparation. Sold in ½-oz., 1, and 2-oz. bottles.

GELATINE.—The purest preparation of this nutritious agent extant is MORSON'S.

PEPTIC FOOD for Invalids and Infants, digestible, nutritious, and palatable. Sold in ½-lb. and 1-lb. tins.

All the above are carefully packed and shipped to orders, which must be made payable in England.

PROFESSIONAL OPINIONS
SUPPORTING AND RECOMMENDING THIS SYSTEM.

March, 1871.
I have much pleasure in bearing my unqualified testimony to the admirable system of military exercises as given in Sergeant-major B. Browne's book. I can speak confidently of it, having had personal experience of its value. I am in the habit of recommending it to all those under my care, who require this additional mode of treatment for developing their frame.

C. M. MILLER, M.D.,
Assistant-surgeon, London Rifle Brigade.

Mr. Browne.—Nothing can be more true, in my opinion, than all you say in favour of training all our boys to military exercises. Its usefulness cannot be overrated, either to the boys themselves or to the nation, which would thus find, in a short time, and without any inconvenience or effort, the best part of its educated population prepared to take part in the defence of the country, almost without training, and should their services in this way happily never be required, the country would still have the satisfaction of seeing its young male population immensely benefited in health, strength, appearance, and general manliness. If carried out at all schools, it would become the favourite pastime of the boys.

H. BYRNE, Lieutenant-general.

Birkbeck Schools, Kingsland, N., March 7, 1871.
For some years past all the boys and girls of these schools have been put through a course of systematic drill, such as that laid down in Sergeant-major Browne's book. The results have been in the highest degree satisfactory. Not only is the physical condition of the children greatly improved, but the discipline of the drill-ground produces habits of obedience and attention, which, carried into the school-room, conduce greatly to the mental progress of the children, as well as materially aid in maintaining order. Until the time shall come when the Government shall wisely insist upon every child being efficiently drilled, schoolmasters who have not yet tried the experiment will do well to do so without delay.

Of course it is of the utmost importance that the drill-instructor should not be a mere martinet. He must be able to convey his instructions clearly and pleasantly; have an unlimited supply of patience, and show that he really takes an interest in his work.

It has been our good fortune for some years to have secured the services of Sergeant-major Browne, the author of this little book ("Setting-up Drill," &c.), who is not only assiduous in performing his duties, but who is fond of his work, and shows it, and, therefore, succeeds admirably.

JAMES RUNTZ, Head Master.

Kingsland Middle Class Schools, Sandringham-road, March 7, 1871.

Physical exercise is undoubtedly one of the requisites of youth, and if such exercise be conducted with a purpose, it is not only productive of health to the body, but also induces habits of order and energy. In our schools the system of drill instruction has been adopted with the best results, and I am quite convinced that any school would be the better for its introduction. Of course a great deal depends upon the drill-instructor; but if such an one as ours (Sergeant-major Browne, who is thoroughly fond of the work, and at the same time a strict disciplinarian and a perfect gentleman), be obtained, the result will be all that can be desired.

ROBERT LANK, Head Master.

Southgate-road Middle Class School, De Beauvoir-town, N., March 6, 1871.

It is fortunate in the present day there is but little need for insisting upon this physical training of youth, as its importance is so generally recognised. To insure success, however, it is indispensable that it should be conducted by well-qualified instructors, such as are apt to teach, of gentlemanly manners and good disciplinarians. From my observations of Sergeant-major Browne, I am able to testify to his possession of these qualifications, and have very great pleasure in recommending his system of drill to those who may be desirous of introducing physical exercises into their schools.

THOMAS WILSON, F.R.G.S., Head Master.

Finishing Establishment for Young Ladies,
Benyon-house, 32, Culford-road, De Beauvoir-town, N.,
March 6, 1871.

Mrs. Aldam has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficiency of Sergeant-major Browne's method of drilling, and as possessing not only great patience, but also consideration for the strength of the pupils, that no undue fatigue is occasioned, no too sudden a strain upon the muscles of growing children, eager, perhaps, to outdo their school-fellows, a point too frequently overlooked, when a large number are being drilled.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

Are the best medicine for people whose faculties are jaded and whose energies are exhausted by trying temperatures, too much work, or over indulgence. A few doses of these pills always prove a simple, safe, and cooling treatment for all stomach and liver complaints; a longer course will set right every organ whose action is impaired, strengthen every structure whose tone is diminished, and remove that blood whose purity is tainted. Giddiness, headache, nausea, flatulency, and all other dyspeptic symptoms, yield with surprising certainty and celerity to these corrective pills, which lay siege to these disagreeable sensations, and carry off, without pain or disagreeable drawback, these peccant matters, which are disordering the entire human machine.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail, are—from Bombay, November 4; Agra and Madras, November 2; Calcutta, November 1.

DETAILED accounts of the Viceroy's progress from his last days at Lahore to his departure from Multán will be found in another page. Lord Northbrook signalled his visit to Lahore by an act of well-timed clemency towards the imprisoned leaders of the Mohammad-Khail tribe, whose punishment for outrages on the Panjab Frontier was noticed in these columns many months ago. The Darbar held by his Lordship at Multán on the 25th October was attended by the Nawab of Bhawalpúr and a number of the neighbouring frontier chiefs, whom the Viceroy addressed in terms of befitting courtesy. On the 27th the latter embarked at Shersah for his voyage down the Indus, reaching Kasmór on the 31st. From that place his Lordship was to ride to the frontier town of Jacobabad, where the Khan of Khelat was ready to meet him and account, let us hope, for his late unruly proceedings. Unfortunately the first stage out of Kasmór his Lordship was attacked with fever—apparently dengue—which compelled his return to the river-side, where he again embarked on the 1st of November. Instead of meeting the Khan at Jacobabad, the Khan and his Political Agent started on the 2nd to meet the Viceroy at Sakkar, where Lord Northbrook was to spend the next few days.

It now appears that only ten of the numerous chiefs and princelings of Katiwar would after all have to present themselves at the Viceroy's grand Darbar in Bombay.

SOME of the local Governors were returning to their respective capitals, Sir Philip Wodehouse having reached Bombay on the 2nd November, and Lord Hobhouse being due at Madras on the 9th. The latter, instead of proceeding to Bombay, will pay the Viceroy a visit in Calcutta early next year. Mr. Davis on the other hand was to start from his capital, Lahore, on the 6th November for his cold-weather tour through the Panjab.

FOR want of more solid food, the Indian papers have lately taken to discussing all kinds of rumours. One week we hear that Lord Napier is to be succeeded by General Norman. This time the talk turns upon Mr. G. Campbell, who is said to have resigned his post in Bengal, through disgust at Lord Northbrook's throwing out the Bengal Municipal Bill. It was even reported that the Viceroy had telegraphed to the India Office for instructions as to the course he should take in this matter. As it happens that the Viceroy is since known to have sanctioned the Bill in question, we may fairly assume the shadowy nature of the stories which hinged upon the contrary assumption.

ANOTHER prey to popular hearsay seems to be Sir W. Muir, who is said to have been offered a year's extension of his term of government. We should be glad to hear that such an offer had been made and accepted, for Sir William is a Governor not easy to replace; but the Simla journal assures its readers that the offer, even if it had been made, would not be accepted.

No fresh cases of cholera were reported from Pesháwar between the 21st and 26th October. Before that time more than forty Europeans had died out of sixty attacked, while the proportion of deaths to seizures among the natives was about 300 to 500. At Faizabad, in Oudh, the disease broke out again on the 23rd, and was still raging by latest accounts. Some 270 of the convicts there have been moved out into camp. A curious circumstance is reported by the medical authorities in that station. We have heard, we think, of monkeys suffering from human ailments, but it is new to hear that a number of elephants have not only caught but died of cholera at Faizabad.

It seems that the Garo Hills, lying between Mymensing and the Khasia Hills in North-Eastern Bengal, are about to be the scene of a very little war, arising we are told out of a bazaar quarrel which took place in that thinly-peopled country some months ago. A small force has already been equipped against the unruly tribes in the upper ranges of these hills, whose entire population is reckoned in the latest census at only 50,000 spread over a tract of more than 2,000 square miles. One half of their number is said to be peacefully disposed, and the rest cannot give our troops more trouble than they or their forefathers have done twice or thrice before. The Garo Hills being apparently rich in minerals and extending close to the Brahmaputra, while the vallies yield plenty of cassia, indiarubber, and other useful products, we hope that the force will be accompanied by some officer of the Geological Department.

THE reports of the crops in most parts of India are very cheering. Bengal indeed is likely to suffer commercially from an excess of indigo. In the Central Provinces a splendid harvest is expected. The cotton crops promise well in Sind and Western India, and the grain in Gujrát, Khandesh, and the South Maratha country will yield more than an average crop, both in quantity and quality. We regret however to hear that the coffee-crops in Mysore and other parts of Madras are "almost a failure."

OUR Indian contemporaries still harp on the notion that Major-General Norman, one of the youngest officers of his rank in the army, is likely to succeed Lord Napier, who intends shortly to throw up his command. What grounds there are for either supposition we cannot guess. Lord Napier has still some time to serve, his health does not appear to be failing him, and General Norman, for all his undoubted claims to public recognition, can hardly hope to rise so conspicuously above the heads of many old officers in other respects at least as well fitted for so high a post. Another rumour from India would give the refusal of Sir R. Temple's office to Mr. Ayrton. To that suggestion, at any rate, all we can say is, after Cromwell's fashion, "The Lord preserve us from Mr. Ayrton!" The worst blunders of the light-hearted Finance Minister would be a trifle to the tender mercies of such a successor. A thousand times better would be the appointment of Sir Madhava Rao, even if he should contrive to fill his own purse in finding the ways and means for the Indian Exchequer.

THE Bombay Gazette deems it far from unlikely that one of the first places which Sir Bartle will visit on his way from Suez will be Bombay itself, where one chief centre of the slave trade is known or at least generally believed to exist; the other centre being in Cutch. In both places there is a large community of Banians, many of whom have a certain interest in the traffic we are now going to try and put down. In a letter to the same journal a Hindu merchant openly maintained the ability of his fellow-citizens to suppress the trade in question by their own efforts; and a native journal—the Jam-i-Jamshed—urges the better class of native merchants in Bombay to excommunicate such of their caste-fellows as continue to traffic directly or indirectly in slaves. Sir B. Frere will doubtless have many inducements to revisit the scene of his former labours as a Governor; and if he went, he might reckon upon a hearty welcome from many of his former subjects, excluding perhaps the shareholders of the Bombay Bank. The fact of his being accompanied by an agent of the Rao of Cutch seems, at any rate, to suggest the likelihood of his landing somewhere in Western India to confer with those who may help him in putting a pressure on the Banians.

Two well-known Hindu merchants in Bombay have already come forward to help in throwing light on the connection between certain classes of Indian traders and the slave-dealers on the African coast. It is from Bombay, they say, that the money goes for the purchase of beads, wire, and the other articles which are exchanged for slaves; and the trade is not confined to the Banian caste. A good many Bhattiahs have a hand in it, as also the Kojah tribe of Mohammedans, who have special means of dealing with the Arabs and other Mussulmans who beat up African villages in quest of slaves. Some of these gentry have already taken fright at the report of Sir B. Frere's coming among them to spoil their little game, and it is probable that, for the time at least, they will withdraw their agents from the traffic.

ACCORDING to a Kabul newsletter in the Delhi Gazette it seems doubtful, as Mr. Prichard points out in the Times, whether the Russians have really withdrawn all the troops intended to attack Khiva. The writer of the letter had heard from a Kabul merchant, who had an agent at Khiva, that "the Russian troops had besieged the city of Vorgunje or Khiva, and had taken it after some fighting. Several had been killed and wounded on both sides, the King had been taken prisoner, and the city plundered." From this it would certainly seem as if the telegram which announced the withdrawal of the Russian expedition referred to the withdrawal of the Caspian Division only, while the division which started from the Sea of Aral, or some other Russian force, had gone on to Khiva.

THE long-mooted question as to the best mode of carrying goods and passengers across the English Channel seems in a fair way of being speedily settled in favour of the scheme proposed by Captain Dicey, and since taken up by the Company to whose programme we lately referred. A small steamer on the new plan will soon be afloat on the Thames by way of experiment, and a contract for building a large one on the scale required for crossing the Channel has already, we hear, been taken up. With the main features of the proposed vessel our readers have by this time become sufficiently acquainted. Its chief object, as we have said before, is to combine the greatest amount of speed, comfort, safety, and stowage-room with the least possible amount of rolling and pitching, the shallowest draught, and the smallest outlay involved in such conditions; all this to be attained by carrying out on a large scale, with all the newest appliances, the principle of the twin ship as seen in some parts of the Eastern seas, and of the "outrigger" craft that ply in the harbours of Ceylon. To the steadiness of such vessels in a rough sea ample evidence has already been borne by competent observers, and among seafaring men in general the practical merits of the principle remain beyond dispute. It is probably impossible to abolish sea-sickness; but the Dicey method will certainly reduce the risks of it to the lowest point compatible with other conditions of perhaps equal importance. The great breadth between the two hulls, when decked over, will insure ample room for passengers and cargo, while the form of the vessel will entirely counteract the danger usually involved in light draught combined with a great deal of top-hamper. In this respect the advantage lies undoubtedly with the Dicey model over the rival scheme of Messrs. Reed and Bessemer. A single ship of great size, very light draught, and great height above water, must inevitably be less safe in a strong wind and rough sea, than a twin vessel of the same or even less draught, riding on two separate keels whose hulls, from the space between them, necessarily balance each other. There may be a question whether the twin ship would have sufficient buoyancy for the great Atlantic billows; but amidst the short chopping seas of the Channel between Dover and Calais its superior steadiness would involve no loss of sufficient buoyancy. In point of speed it ought anyhow to surpass its single-hulled rival, owing to the much smaller body of water its two narrow hulls and sharp bows would displace in a sea-way. In point of cheapness also there would seem to be no comparison between the double-steamer, with its perfect simplicity of construction, and a large single steamer fitted up with Mr. Bessemer's elaborate contrivance for transforming the main saloon into a huge swing-cot. With regard to roominess again, for all needful purposes the Dicey vessel would probably bear away the palm. Looking at the rival projects from every point of view, and in spite of all that may be said in favour of the swinging saloon, we have very little doubt which kind of vessel would prove at once the quicker, safer, cheaper, more comfortable, and better adapted for the Channel trade.

THE story of Sir Madhava Rao's career deserved the space devoted to it in the pages of the Calcutta Review. A brief summary of it is all that we can here give. A student in the High School of Madras during the rule of Lord Elphinstone, he presently became tutor to the young Maharajah of Travancore. Preferred to a good post in the Civil Service of that kingdom, he rose in 1855 to the chief control of the Southern Division. A few years later, on the death of the old Dewan, or Prime Minister, of Travancore, Madhava Rao filled his place. In ten years he raised the revenue from Rs. 4,000,000 to Rs. 5,154,007, in spite of the losses he risked by abolishing monopolies, lowering export duties from 15 to 5 per cent., and sweeping away a host of minor taxes. The salaries of the civil officers have been raised and regularly paid; large sums are yearly expended on education and public works, things hardly known before his time in Travancore; trade has gained largely from the network of good roads that covers the land; and the spread of irrigation has multiplied the crops. In 1870 there were open 31 district schools, containing 2,426 boys, taught by 101 teachers, besides four girls' schools; while 19 English schools gave instruction to 1,222 boys. In the College at Trevandrum there are 133 senior and 400 junior students, while 186 boys are taught in the primary school. Under the sway, in short, of this wise Marátha Brahman, the little State of Travancore has been transformed from a kind of howling wilderness into a fair and fruitful garden. In some of these reforms the late Dewan has, no doubt, been warmly aided by the Resident, Mr. Maltby; but the chief credit for what has been done must still rest with Sir Madhava Rao himself.

A VERY noteworthy contribution to the literature of disease has just appeared from the pen of Mr. R. T. Lyons, a Bengal Army Surgeon, in the shape of a Treatise on Relapsing or Famine Fever. Basing his treatment of the subject on the views propounded in Murchison's essay on the fevers of Great Britain, the author goes into a careful and well-nigh exhaustive survey of facts and opinions gathered from all sources regarding the relapsing fevers of India. The results recorded by former observers are made to bear out those of his own experience in the Punjab and during two recent epidemics of relapsing fever in Lower Bengal. The history of the disease in India is for the first time carefully traced, from the earliest recorded instance in the sufferings of Mr. Holwell and those who survived the dreadful night in the Black Hole of Calcutta, down to the "Peshawar Fever" and other like epidemics of 1870. Dr. Lyons has a firm belief in the identity of intermittent, remittent, and continued fevers; and he "absolutely rejects the malaria theory of the origin of fevers," as opposed to all recent evidence both in England and India. He holds that "want of food is the origin of the disease, and that it is propagated by contagion." In the dengue epidemic of this year he finds merely another form of the fever which annually ravages Bardwán. Whatever truth there may be in these propositions, it is certain at any rate that his arguments are supported by an imposing array of facts and illustrations, which will afford matter for careful study to inquiring members of his profession. In this connection we may add that another medical writer of great Indian experience, Dr. Oldham, argued a year ago with much force against the malarious origin of fevers in general, although in some matters of detail he differs more or less widely from Dr. Lyons.

On the morning of Thursday last Sir Bartle Frere started for Paris on his destined mission. He arrived at Paris the same night. Among those whom saw him so far on his way were Sir John Kaye and General Pollock. At Brindisi he and his suite are to embark on board the Enchantress, which will convey the party through the Suez Canal to Zanzibar. The suite consists of the Rev. George Percy Badger, Secretary of Legation; Major Ewan Smith, C.S.I., Private Secretary; the Kázi Shahab-ud-din, Agent to the Rao of Cutch; Captain Fairfax, R.N.; and Messrs. Hill and Grey, Attaches, from the Foreign and India Office respectively. Major Smith, who has just been honoured with a Companionship of the Star of India, entered the Madras Army in 1859, served with distinction in the Abyssinian Campaign, and was lately employed under Sir F. Goldsmid in the mission to Sistan.

We understand that Mr. A. L. Haliburton, assistant to the Director of Supplies and Transports at the War Office, has just received from Lord Northbrook the offer of an important post in the Military Finance Department of the Indian Government.

THE Burmese Embassy, now on their way home through Paris, was there received on Friday by M. de Rémusat, Minister at the Foreign Office.

A BERLIN telegram of November 22 states that a despatch has been sent to the English Government, expressing the German Government's sympathy with the objects of the Zanzibar Mission, and their readiness to support it with all the moral and diplomatic influence of Germany. In proof of this, the German Consulates on the East African Coast have been instructed to help the Mission to the utmost of their power.

TROOPS FOR INDIA.—A special telegram from Calicut informs us that H.M.'s Indian troopship Jumna, with reliefs for the Madras Army, arrived at that port yesterday. The Jumna also touched at Cannanore, and is expected at Bombay on Monday next. H.M.'s troopship the Euphrates left Suez for Bombay yesterday (Friday) morning, the s.s. Dalhousie, Bombay Marine, arrived at Kurrachee yesterday afternoon.—Bombay Times, Nov. 4.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

INDIA ON THE EVE OF THE BRITISH CONQUEST.

Few if any passages in Indian History are more remarkable than the rise, growth, and culmination of the Marátha power in the hundred years that followed the accession of Aurangzib to the throne of Delhi. In that time—from the middle of the 17th to the middle of the 18th century—the seed first sown by the bold adventurer Sivaji had taken root, sprung up, and like the Banyan-tree of India, struck fresh roots from successive branches of the parent stem, until, just before the dreadful slaughter of Pánapat, the Marátha power extended more or less visibly over nearly the whole of India from the Himalayas to Cape Comorin. Under the rule of three successive Peshwas or Prime Ministers of the same Brahman tribe and family, the glory of the Marátha name had been raised in the last fifty of those hundred years to a height whence no ordinary mishap seemed likely to bring it down again. But for a curious chain of events, in part only due to Marátha shortcomings, it seemed for a moment as if all India would be united, perhaps for the first time, into a great confederacy of Hindu States under an Emperor of the most honoured Hindu caste. Even after the rout of Pánapat there was a time when the Marátha Hydra, recovering from its wounds, began once more to raise its head aloft and aim at continuing its suspended task. But instead of advancing over the wrecks of the Moghal Empire, it found a new and fatal barrier in the growth of that new power which Clive and Hastings had planted firmly on Indian ground, a power against which it was doomed to struggle in vain. The old dream of Marátha supremacy was finally dispelled when the Peshwa of Puna became a pensioner of the East India Company more than fifty years ago, when the Bhoslas of Nágpúr were placed under English protection, and Sindia and Holkar owed the retention of their diminished power to the policy or forbearance of their English conquerors.

In the course of their struggle against the Moghals the courtiers of Sivaji were largely favoured by the short-sighted policy of Aurangzib, as well as the unwieldy nature and self-dividing tendencies of the empire which he extended to its farthest bounds. Had Akbar's system of employing Hindus in every branch of state-service been followed by the greatest of his descendants, Sivaji and his successors would have made little way in their attempt to reconquer India for the Hindus. But Aurangzib's inveterate bigotry gained everywhere powerful friends to what thereby became a national cause. The Rájputs who would have fought for Akbar were always ready to revel against the son of Shah Jehán; and the leading Hindus in his own provinces bore no goodwill to an emperor who turned them out of his service, who reimposed on them the hateful poll-tax, and steadily persecuted the national creed. Instead of strengthening the Pathán princes in the Dakhan against their Marátha assailants, he gave new energies and a wider scope to the latter by his utter subversion of old dynasties representing the Shia form of Islám. Moghal viceroys and governors also were prone, under weak emperors, to become hereditary rulers of the provinces committed to their charge, and to seek help from Hindu neighbours in their frequent contests with the central power. The wily and ambitious Nizám-ul-Mulk himself was glad to further his own schemes by winking at Marátha encroachments on Moghal provinces beyond the Narbadda and in the valley of the Lower Ganges. Intrigues and dissensions in Delhi brought the soldiers of Holkar and Sindia into the Moghal capital and the heart of Rohilkand. Wherever they went, the Marátha leaders found willing allies or weak antagonists. Provinces bestowed on them as fiefs of the Empire opened the way to yet more daring encroachments on the Empire itself. The skilful statesmanship of successive Peshwas turned the dissensions even of rival leaders to the common account, while the more intractable were armed with commissions to levy the Marátha Chaut in the countries they might invade. Rájputána itself paid tribute to the Hindu power established at Púna, and Ragoba's horsemen even drove the garrisons of the Afghan Ahmad Shah out of the Panjáb. It was only when Bálahji's lieutenants lost their heads in the pride begotten of these last achievements, that the fatal field of Panipat, if it failed to avert the ruin of the Moghal Empire, at least succeeded in dealing the Marátha cause a blow from which it has never yet recovered.

The history of those eventful hundred years furnishes the motive and the moral of a very readable volume just published from the pen of Mr. Sidney Owen, Reader in Indian Law and History to the University of Oxford.* In this work, the substance of a course of lectures delivered last year, the author has achieved with credit the difficult task of guiding the reader pleasantly and to good purpose through some of the most tangled passages in the history of any country. The scene of his narrative covers so wide a space, the plot is necessarily so involved, the characters at first sight appear so strange, puzzling, or uninteresting to Western eyes, and the facts concerning them are often so obscure or conflicting, that any attempt at a clear, well-ordered sketch of the period in question should be received with thankfulness. Mr. Owen's success in this direction deserves all the more praise, inasmuch as he has worked up into a popular, or at least a picturesque shape, the fruits of careful research among the best authorities. To all students of that period Elphinstone of course furnishes a mine of varied trustworthy, and suggestive reading; while "the minute, luminous, sagacious, and scrupulously conscientious History of the Marhattas by Captain Grant Duff," can hardly be overpraised as a classic masterpiece on that particular subject. But in Elphinstone's work the story of Marátha progress has to be treated in its due perspective, as a kind of adjunct to the main theme, and Elphinstone's severely simple style, like that of Caesar, appeals to a higher order of culture than the average learner. Grant Duff on the other hand needs compressing to suit the taste or the circumstances of most English readers. From these and many collateral sources, including Wilks and Orme, the author has compiled a volume full of interest and instruction conveyed in a pleasing, spirited, and pregnant style, as of one who has hardly room to say all that he would like to say. The abundance of his materials and the romantic character of his story were all in his favour, but the way he has put together the different parts of a very intricate subject entitle him to the praise of a thoughtful and painstaking compiler. The introductory chapters on Moghal history and administration form a worthy prelude to the main task of tracing the decline of the Moghals and the rise of their Marátha assailants. The life of the daring freebooter and dreamy enthusiast Sivaji is in itself a perfect romance, teeming with "hair-breadth 'scapes and perilous adventures;" but the story, as once more told in Mr. Owen's pages, loses nothing of its stirring interest from his mode of telling it. The development of his theme opens a fine field for discriminating studies of Hindu and Mohammedan character, an opening of which he has worthily availed himself. Perhaps the most striking and original feature in the book is the happiness of the author's frequent allusions to similar events, characters, and customs in European history. Nothing is so likely to help and encourage the general reader in his attempts to gain some insight into Eastern history, especially that of India, than the pointing out of such parallels and analogies. They may not always fit in every detail, but it is something even to lay hold of general resemblances between the men and customs of different countries, to realise for instance the relation of a Moghal Emperor towards his feudal lords, to compare the progress of Marátha raiders in Hindustan to that of the Normans in France, to observe the tendency of military fiefs to become hereditary, and to note the process which transformed the Peshwas or prime ministers of Marátha sovereigns into Mayors of the Palace and ultimate heads of a great confederacy.

TRANSLATIONS OF THE BIBLE.—II.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In my last I alluded to three parties in the Church of England who are apathetic on the question of making classical and idiomatic translations into the languages spoken by the nations inhabiting our vast Indian Empire.

1. Those who despair of making good translations, and refuse to co-operate with other parties in the work.

2. Those who think the existing translations good enough, and refuse to ask for any assistance from our Christian Government.

3. Those who deny the use of good translations, or their efficacy in making good subjects, good Christians, and good men.

To the first I answer that co-operation by the various parties in the Church was found practicable at the Reformation. The High Church then exerted great efforts to prevent mis-translations, and incorrect readings of Holy Scripture. The Low Church allowed their weaker brethren to retain many expressions incomprehensible to the common people. Co-operation still exists; all opinions in the Church are trying to improve the English translation; why should two hundred millions of souls be left without correct knowledge of the Almighty?

To the second party in the Church of England I reply that without the assistance of Government we would not to this day in all probability have been able to boast of any readable Indian translation. The efforts of private individuals and of societies would have utterly failed to produce grammatical and idiomatic versions had they not been assisted by Lord Wellesley's College. What would Dr. Carey have effected without Lord Wellesley's countenance and pecuniary aid? What would Henry Martyn, a Government servant himself, have effected, had he, and Mirza Titrut, and Sabat not had before them the Oordoo translation of the Gospels which Dr. William Hunter, of Lord Wellesley's College, had collated with the Greek? Could Martyn have made any use of Schultz's translation of 1741, or of the bad idiom and orthography of the translation published in 1758?

That the support of Government was invaluable to Dr. Carey may be inferred from the following extract from Bagster's Bible of Every Land, page 93:—

A testimony as to the estimation in which this (the Bengalee) version was held was speedily afforded by the appointment of Dr. Carey to the Professorship of the Bengalee, Sanskrit, and Marhatta Languages in the College of Fort William, then recently established. This truly providential circumstance greatly augmented his means of usefulness as a translator of the Scriptures; for learned natives crowded from all parts of India to the College for literary employment, and, through their instru-mentality, Dr. Carey saw all the learning and almost all the languages of India placed within his reach.

Dr. Carey's salary as Professor in Lord Wellesley's College was, I believe, not less than £1,800 a-year, and his share of the patronage of nominating eighty-nine Moonshes, eight Moulvies, and eleven Pundits must have been invaluable to him in his work of translation. One of Dr. Carey's Bengali Pundits survived, I believe, till the year 1867, being able to look back upon a very useful and long life.

With reference to the assertion that the existing translations are good enough, I can refer to numerous passages in the Bible Society's annual reports, proving how imperfect the translations have been and still are; among many passages I would instance pp. 138 and 139 of the Report for 1864; also the Report for 1867, and page 221 of the Report for 1869; in the Report for 1872, page 193, I find the following:—

There is a peculiar charm in the word of God, when translated into the vernacular of any people, which renders it doubly attractive to them.

And yet Mr. Theophilus, in page 211, writes:—

It is a well-known fact that the English educated natives, whose number is rapidly increasing, prefer the English to the vernacular Bible. They would not read it at all, or read it only in English.

This would not be the case if the translations were classical and idiomatic.

Let us examine the list of Bible translations at present in the possession of the Bible Society, and offered by that Society for sale after its sixty-eight years of unceasing activity. (See pages 20 to 26 of the Report for 1872, and compare them with the historical table of languages in the Appendix.)

Of Hindui translations spoken by forty millions of souls, I find only three of the Gospels, and the Acts. I cannot find any portion of the Old Testament.

Of Bengalee, only the New Testament. There is a great deal of emulation at present existing in Calcutta between the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel and the Baptist Society. Some of the members of both Societies have of late years been working very hard to improve the translation into Bengali, not only of the New Testament, but also of the Psalms. Had we a Lord Wellesley as Viceroy, the learned men of both societies would speedily be induced to work harmoniously together.

Of Pushtoo, the language spoken by multitudes in the Punjab, I cannot find a translation of any portion of the Bible existing in the Bible Society's Depository. We need not wonder that "very few Mahomedan teachers of these parts will believe that the Christians possess the Old Testament Scriptures" (page 205 of Report for 1872).

There exist translations in the possession of Auxiliary Bible Societies in India which are not to be found in England; but ought not copies to be sent hither for the careful criticism of European scholars?

No other European has ever devoted so much learning to the translation of the Bible into Indian languages as Henry Martyn did, but no sooner had he published in 1808 his unrivalled translation of the New Testament, than he commenced to revise it, so dissatisfied was he with the results of his work. He bore witness that it often cost him and his coadjutors whole days to make one chapter intelligible in Oordoo. During a period of sixty-four years no one has, I believe, succeeded in improving his version of the New Testament.

3rdly. With reference to the disciples of the third school, who believe that a great portion of the Bible is not infallibly inspired, I leave our learned divines and historians to prove to them that neither civilisation, nor science, nor commerce has ever instilled virtue either into men or women. The fear of God is alone powerful to check profligacy, fraud, lying, and murder.

True it is that missionaries are but men, and that even wise virgins slumber whilst the bridegroom tarries; otherwise, the question might well be asked, what can a missionary do without the Bible? Where are his credentials, where his text-book, where his authority for erecting in the wilderness of man's corrupt nature the cross of Christ, and proclaiming in its dreary solitude that name which is above every name?" —P. 216 of Report for 1872.

If our so-called Christian Government can find money to assist a learned professor in translating the Hindoo Vedas into English, will not its tender conscience permit it to assist in the translation of the Bible into Hindui or Sanskrit? The Very Rev. Dr. J. A. Jeremie wrote on Oct. 4, 1867, regarding translations into Indian languages:—

If the task is to be well done, it must be directed and encouraged by the Government in India.

And a friend, very learned in Sanskrit literature, on the 14th September of the same year justly urged regarding our own beautiful translation:—

Those who cannot drink of the original fountain ought to have the water transmitted to them through as pure a channel as possible. We improve all other translations, except the most important, from a fear of what we imagine to be a worse evil. But what can be a worse evil than deception? We all know that certain passages are mistranslated, and we deceive the general reader of God's Word by allowing them to remain.

Major Malleson, in his "Recreations of an Indian Official," records in p. 236 that Feizi, a Mahomedan, the intimate friend of the Emperor Akbar, translated the four Gospels into Persian. I once hoped that the Duke of Argyll might have been induced to devote a few hours to the consideration of the duty of the Indian Government to transmit to her Majesty's subjects Divine Truth through as pure a channel as possible.—Your obedient servant, T.

THE CENSUS AND THE SALT TAX.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR.—The Indian Government should be invited to revise its calculations of the average consumption of salt by its subjects in India.

The census lately taken in the Provinces under the Government of Bengal shows that there are many millions of souls more than the population was estimated at; each soul actually consumes on an average only two-thirds of the estimated quantity of pure Cheshire salt.

It is probable that the remaining one-third is made up partly by adulteration with sand and mud, with sulphate of soda, muriate of magnesia, and muriate of lime. If the English Adulteration of Food Act were to be extended to India, it might easily be proved that each human being, without calculating the consumption by cattle, consumes much less salt than is required for the preservation of health.

Can you inform your readers what measures are now being taken to reduce the tax on, and increase that consumption of, salt?

On the 6th of January last year, a distinguished statesman wrote:—

You may be quite sure that I shall not depart from my views on the subject of the Salt-tax, which are very much in accord with yours. When I was in the Central Provinces I took up the subject warmly. I believed that we should have achieved a reduction of the N.W.P. Customs Duty, and the abolition of a vast Custom Line through Central India, if it had not been for the financial crisis. I have now in my head a scheme of the kind, and will do what I can.

THE HINDUSTANI ABROAD.—IV.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I again am introducing for second time delicate subject; but, bubbling up too much inside me, must come out. Besides, it is No. 1 thing which is most astonishing to natives, namely, freedom of women. I am long trying hard not to write so much on this question, but cannot help.

Little time ago friend tell me that, if you wish properly to understand English character, must go to theatre; so off in a handsome cab to her Majesty's Royal Covent Garden, to see "Babil and Beejoo." How can I describe? I exhaust my dictionary of English tongue, then I cannot discover enough fulsome compliments to make. It is enchantment in common verbiage.

All the performers are dressed like princes and princesses—noble, good-looking beings; and Mr. Maas, very handsome, sporting like Krishna among the milking-maids in Hindoo story-book. But at the dancers and young ladies I was struck with thunder! At our humble miserable natches and tom-shas, the most diabolically wicked females, however ugly, which time perform, always through modesty wrap themselves up from feet to cranium in Benares kincob or Dacca muslin; but here lovely young milk-coloured females, very innocent, respectable, and spotless, quite undressed, stand staring around without winking, then suddenly caper in air with agility of lightning! Then every one using focus with magnifying opera spectacles stares hard as possible. As Persian poet remarks:—

"At such scene even a roasted fowl would throw out feathers."

Perhaps custom reconciles, but all this not good for natives of Hindostan. We are not educated gradually. This the reason that so much fault found with poor Indians who come to London. In India all European ladies live at home, when go abroad they wrap up and ride in barouche carriage very haughty, eyes looking up in sky. Own women all kept tight in doors, if go out, then must wear thick veil over face, and not speak; if not, must cut nose off, or how can possibly hold? When Hindustani come to London then new custom too much for his poor head. Not his fault. He not made the same as European. This all similar that I say in No. 1 letter. Since that time cannot find fat white old gentleman who promised to take to Royal Anthropological Society; instead, I am reading Dr. Darwin's learned crepusculum "Origin of Man," to find out if all same origin with European gentleman, but think not, as said before, because observe with own eyes too much difference. First place, character very much opposite got. Natives of India do not laugh often, only smile sometimes. Most time silent, grave as judge. European gentleman always making loud guffaw with purple-coloured, bursting face and gaping mouth opened wide. Therefore plenty comic papers publish for making split his side. Punch and Fun sold everywhere twice in week. Everybody reading. Then base mechanic always chaffing jokes in street. Low caste native only open mouth to give indecent abuse. How can both be same original sort? Cannot believe, besides Bengalee gentleman Dr. Ghose tell me not same figure, female too small in size. Heel and leg too long, and no calf got; hips small, skin of body plenty coarse; smell too much, hair not fine, and when walking can tell difference, if both dressed the same. If European is born from old gorilla as see in "Babil and Beejoo," then, natives of India, son of another caste monkey, perhaps Hunooman. Suppose true, then why different breed, have same religion same customs? This not according to Cocker. Perhaps for your caste it is not harm to mix with sexes, but for other branch of human pedigree not good or proper.

No use then you send out "Female Zenana mission" to open minds of native female, and make fit for mixture of sexes. You only spoil. You have proverb. "You cannot make sow's ear out of silk purse;" this is parallel exactest case.

One day at evening party in London I was seeing two ladies Parsees of Bombay Presidency come with husbands, but reminded too much of lines of Hindustani poet.

They were sitting like owls ashamed, shutting their eyes at noon, middle of flock of beautiful doves on top of neem tree.

THE GOVERNMENT OF CASHMERE. TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

DEAR SIR,—I regret much to observe that this much to be deplored feud between the Soonee and Sheea Mahomedans of Sreenugger, in Cashmere, greatly exaggerated as I have reason to believe, has been made a handle once more to attack the local Government on altogether irrelevant questions. There appeared, in the Times of the 18th inst., an extract from a letter received by last mail by a correspondent of that influential journal, from a friend residing in the town of Sreenugger. In this extract it is assumed that "his blood would boil with indignation if he saw the state of things here," and stated, after giving what I know to be a brightly-coloured account of the disturbance, that "the Vizier and his troops plundered the houses of both sects, and sent them indiscriminately to prison; and here justice stops short, although hundreds of innocents have suffered and are now perfectly ruined. The mountain passes are so guarded that they cannot escape (?). There are heavy taxes on every thing. Not an inch of ground will the Maharaja sell, and more than half the proceeds of both farms and manufactures goes to him. This is the most cruelly oppressed country, and yet a British tributary."

This is from one who tells his friend that the Soonees firmly believe the divinity of Mahomed, and that the Sheeas believe in his son Ali! and who may, therefore, be fairly assumed to know nothing about the matter, but what he may gather from his domestic servants, who cram their masters with tales of the most atrocious character "pour passer le temps," thinking thereby to curry favour with those who are generally believed to, and actually do, cast longing looks on the beautiful country which they think ought, right or wrong, to be wrested from the hands of the Maharaja.

His Highness is about as responsible for the unfortunate outbreak, as was the Governor-General of his day for the mutiny at Delhi in 1857, and for the atrocities there committed; and it would have been more creditable to the writer of the above, if, instead of listening to, and giving renewed currency to old tales, often and most successfully refuted, he had done his Highness the justice to say that, no sooner was the news of the outbreak known at Jumoo, than the Maharaja at once ordered the distribution of Rs. 20,000 amongst those who were in more immediate want, and directed his most trusted minister to inquire into the real causes of the catastrophe. I would have addressed the editor of the Times and asked his insertion of this letter, but that he has more than once ignored communications in which I endeavoured to set him right on similar points.—Faithfully yours,

Nov. 21, 1872.

THE EAST AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

The Bombay Gazette remarks that no one could be found so well fitted as Sir Bartle Frere for this work of putting an end to the East African slave-trade, and of opening up communications with Dr. Livingstone. Eminently conciliatory and gentle in his disposition and manners, there is yet a hand of iron under his velvet glove, and if he is sent out to "annihilate" the slave-trade that traffic will have a very poor chance of surviving his mission. Sir Bartle's intimate acquaintance with Western India gives him great advantage, and the fact that he has been Governor of Bombay will give him a commanding position on the East Coast of Africa. Even his knowledge of Indian languages and of Persian will be of service in dealing with many of those implicated in the slave traffic, and much more his intimate acquaintance with Eastern character. He is no stranger to the affairs of Zanzibar, and is personally well known to the reigning family of that place. He is also a personal friend of Dr. Livingstone, who will probably be disposed to confide in him and to co-operate with him. It is, indeed, not unlikely that Sir Bartle Frere may find it necessary, in the prosecution of his mission, to penetrate into East Africa and to reach the lake country. He has spirit enough for such an adventure, and it may be remembered that when, as a youth of eighteen, he first came out to India, he adopted the then most unusual and hazardous course of going alone up the Nile to Keneh, then crossing the desert to Kosseir on the Red Sea, and shipping from thence to Bombay in an Arab buglah. In those times and on the part of a youth who had never been in the East before that was no ordinary feat of travel, and it would be curious if, after so long an interval and towards the close of his eventful public career, Sir Bartle should again distinguish himself by some feat of the same kind. Under the heads of arranging for the annihilation of the slave-trade and opening communication with Dr. Livingstone, a great deal may be done for the opening up of East Africa. In that direction India as well as England may find a great and most important outlet for their superfluous energy and their superfluous population. Every year a larger number of the natives of India are to be found on the low-lying coast land of East Africa, and at a distance of about two hundred miles from the coast we come upon elevated plateaus where the climate is comparatively temperate, and where Europeans could easily labour. As to the lake country, the temperature there is very well suited for white men. In Karague Speke found the temperature ranging during half the year from 65 to 70 deg.; in Uganda, from 68 to 74 deg., and in Unyoro, from 72 to 75 deg. His estimated value of the mean temperature of the lake region for the complete year was only 68 deg., ranging from 49 deg. to 82 deg., and with a rainfall of only 49 inches. It is obvious that such a country, where there is a great deal of fertile soil unutilised, is capable of being colonised; and in the coast regions and in those extending from the coast to the lake country the tribes are in such a state that they would be greatly benefited by the rule of any civilised power. If any progress can be made by Great Britain in Eastern Africa it would be an advantage to the world and to the Africans themselves, but it would be quite unwarrantable to conclude that anything of the kind is intended by this mission to Zanzibar, whatever that mission may ultimately lead to. All we say is that an extension of the power of England in that direction might be made advantageous to England and of incalculable benefit to the Africans themselves.

RUSSIA IN THE EAST.

The Englishman admits that the Khanates, and other independent sovereignties, may be as bad as possible, from a European point of view, but it can hardly be said that their misgovernment had or has any effect on European politics, or that any European nation is or was bound or even "privileged" to interfere. We are tired of the cant which is talked in the so-called interests of civilisation, and take leave most strongly to doubt the honesty of purpose which combines civilisation with conquest. Holy Russia, except for special purposes, wants no extension of her already overgrown possessions, and we should hear little enough about the blessings of trade or the advantages of having security for life and property amongst the tribes who inhabit the Asian Highlands were not their territories on the high road to India. We have never been Russo-phobists, and are not now; but the man must be blind, indeed, who does not see in this steady onward march of the Russian armies a determination not only to be the civiliser, but also the paramount authority; and the English Government may begin to ask itself, how it would like a Russian Generalissimo in possession of Kabul! That this will be the ultimate result of the arrangements now in progress we think likely enough: it is a question of time only. The Amir of Kabul rules over a country most difficult of invasion, it is true; but at the same time he enjoys but a precarious and divided allegiance, and Russian gold may be as good a solvent as Hannibal's Alpine vinegar. That Russia will ever stop short of being our next-door neighbour we do not believe: it would be contrary to all our experience of that patient, plodding, determined, organisation. If she does not want, nor intend to try for, Kabul, her present expeditions are useless, for it would require a very strong faith indeed to believe in the commercial fiction apart from considerations of general policy. The Times advises England, to make common cause with the great exemplar of civilisation, and to help on, rather than impede, the work. If there were the faintest reason to believe in Russian good faith there might be something in the proposition. Russia might civilise and welcome the half-savage territories in which she has been lately disporting herself. There is nothing in Khiva or Bokhara that need induce England to interfere in their behalf; but when the tide of conquest rolls onward, can any reasonable man suppose that it would be stopped by the understanding which our diplomatists might now come to with the representatives of the Czar?

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The Englishman thinks that it is only fair to Mr. Grant Duff to say that, while he seems to share the belief touching the unsuitableness of Indian discussions in the House, he has done his best to provide a substitute for them. The Indian Finance Committee has been accepted and prolonged without a word of dissent by the India Office authorities, whose shortcomings it so unsparingly lays bare. Next session will see its third year of continuous investigation, and no one can read its proceedings without feeling that it does its work in a more searching, more impartial, and every way more satisfactory manner than the House could do. It consists of a small body of members selected without reference to their party politics, but solely for the interest which they take in Indian questions, or for the amount of practical ability which they bring to bear upon them. They have plenty of time to do their work patiently, and enough talent and experience to enable them to do it well. The powers vested in them suffice to gather together a mass of new evidence on every branch of their inquiry, and to subject this evidence to a process of sifting, and of calm analysis which it would be hopeless for Parliament to attempt. Yet the result, although better than could be obtained from a hundred debates in the House, falls far short of what we had hoped for. Mr. Fawcett and his friends start from the sound premises that such inquiry, if it is to be of any real use, must deal with minute and dry details. But they have pushed this argument to so extreme a conclusion as to create a feeling of profound disappointment in the Indian public mind. We have learned that the authorities at Whitehall do not know as much as they should about our accounts, and that several of the departments here display an equal haziness of ideas on the subject. We have reached the truth about our Transport Service and the very heavy charges which it entails on the Indian Exchequer. We have obtained a mass of valuable evidence with regard to the Department of Public Works. Nor do we under-rate the information thus made public property. We believe that more than one important departmental reform will date from the inquiry. But we do not the less shut our eyes to the fact that all the great questions of our financial policy remain pretty much as the Committee found them. They have arrived at nothing which can be accepted as a satisfactory conclusion touching the income-tax. They have contributed no new ideas, no new evidence as to the relationship of local cesses on real property to the imperial land-revenue, or as to the legitimacy of such cesses in permanently settled provinces. They have gone carefully into the lesser abuses of the Transport Services, but they have not touched upon the more costly and still more useless pageantry of three commanders-in-chief for a single country. Nor can their inquiries with regard to the salt-tax be accepted in any other light than as a puerile pastime. They asked the opinions of men whose opinions had been acquired in an India which has passed away, and they left the facts of the present day untouched. Even with reference to the Public Works, their labours have been directed towards the exposure of small departmental shortcomings rather than to the great questions of policy on which the public mind is now anxiously fixed. Of such questions the greatest of all is how to place the Indian peasant beyond the yearly risk of famine without bringing insolvency on the Indian Exchequer. Does the solution lie in a system of local payments for local public works, independently of whether the people use them or not? Lord Mayo with the majority of his Council believed such a plan to be practicable and just. Lord Napier and a very important minority were of opinion that the remedy was even more dangerous than the evil. The Indian mind has been exercised on the subject during the whole period the Committee has been sitting. The battle has been fought again and again in the Supreme Council of the Viceroy and in the Legislative Assembly of the Empire. Minutes have been recorded, despatches written, speeches made, and the Press, both native and European, has teemed with letters and articles. Meanwhile the Indian Committee of the House of Commons has contributed nothing towards the settlement of the question.

FORESTS.—The Government of Bengal has declared a tract of three and a-half square miles in Kamroop to be a reserved Government forest. This, the latest addition to the wood preserves of Bengal, is to be known as the "Matyakhon Forest Reserve."

THE CAVES IN BURMAH.—An interesting series of letters has been published relative to the caves in Burmah, and the probable existence therein of valuable archaeological remains. In June last it was suggested to the Chief Commissioner that some of these caves should be examined by competent persons, and if the prospect was favourable, that the stalagmite floors should be dug up and relics searched for. But there are not only difficulties in the way, but also doubts as to the antiquity of the remains, if any, which may be found. The chief difficulty is of course the sanctity of the caves. They have been used for a very long period as storehouses of Buddhist records, and shrines for images and holy things, and any disturbance of the floors might possibly be considered sacrilegious. With tact, however, this difficulty might be surmounted, and relics be unearthed. But would these be of value? The rich discoveries of Europe—treasure-houses of the bones of primeval carnivora and antediluvian men were owing, first to the fact that the caves had been used by beasts and men, and secondly to the fact that year by year and century by century a fine sediment had settled upon their contents, preserving them from complete destruction. But in the caves of Burmah neither of these conditions of success is present. At the Stone Age it is most probable that they were situated in sea-girt rocks and tenanted only by bats and sea-birds. Man could not have found his way to them in the days before water was conquered by boats, nor could beasts have lived in them. Nevertheless, the inquiry should be prosecuted. It is quite possible that here one, and there another, of the many caves known to exist in Burmah may hold valuable remains of an old time. Indeed, if native testimony is worth anything, one cave does not contain such remains. There is near Lenza, at the Siamese of Ban tha-pau, a cave in which among records and relics is said to be preserved a large skull which the neighbourhood holds sacred as that of an antediluvian man.—Pioneer, Oct. 24.

THE ELEPHANTA CAVES.—The condition in which the Elephanta Caves have lately been kept has been deplored not only by antiquarians, but also by thinking persons who have visited Elephanta; and we are glad to learn that steps are being taken to have the caves properly cleaned out and protected for the future. Six months ago Mr. James Burgess called the attention of Government to the disgraceful condition of the caves, and since then there has been a correspondence going on between the Government of Bombay and its officers and the Government of India, the result of which is that the Supreme Government have sanctioned a monthly expenditure for the protection of the caves of Rs. 50, to be treated as an Imperial charge. This concession having been obtained, the Bombay Government have issued orders to the Public Works Department to carry out, in communication with Mr. Burgess, the necessary improvements. The caves are to be placed in charge of the Executive Engineer, Harbour Defences, with instructions to arrange for the immediate appointment of a trustworthy custodian, who should be required to live on the island with two men under him to sweep and clean the caves, accompany visitors on their rounds, and prevent the commission of any further injury. It is pointed out that care will be required in the selection of a fitting man for the post, as the European pensioners hitherto employed have generally succumbed to the depressing influences of the climate and solitude. The amount of pay which it may be proposed to give to the three men is to be reported for the sanction of Government. No eating or drinking is to be permitted in the caves (which seems rather too strict a rule), or writing or cutting inscriptions on the walls or figures. The Executive Engineer is directed to put up a notice on the spot stating that the custodian will point out a convenient place to those who may wish to take refreshments, which is to be on the high ground not far from the cave, and the custodian is to take care to keep this site clean and free from all rubbish. Visitors to the caves will be required in future to pay a fee of four annas each person, whether children or adults, and admission is to be regulated by tickets to be issued by the Executive Engineer, Harbour Defences, to whom application for the same must be made. The fees will be credited to a fund called the "Elephanta Cave Fund," and the proceeds devoted to the restoration and improvement of the caves.—Bombay Gazette.

THE VICEREGAL PROGRESS.

THE VICEROY AT LAHORE.

Returning from the College on the 23rd October his Excellency drove to the Central Jail, where he displayed the same attentive interest in regard to the prisoners, the jail manufactures for which Lahore is noted, and all the jail arrangements. He signalled his jail visit by an act of grace of a singular description. It will be remembered that about two years ago a fierce band of Waziris near Bunnoo became aggrieved at what appeared to them acts of injustice and oppression by the local officials, and accordingly deserted their old homes for a wild life on the hills over the frontier. A quarrel, however, was to them no quarrel at all without blood, and, accordingly, they laid an ambuscade for a small party of our soldiers and slaughtered six or seven, in a barbarous fashion. The tribe was proscribed and hunted, till at last, wearied out, it made absolute surrender of itself and its property and arms. The ringleaders were sentenced to various punishments, and some were to undergo this in Lahore. Lord Northbrook released four of these men, and gave them a short lecture on the unsatisfactory nature of murder in general, the foolishness of being caught, and the advantage of their considering both sides of the question before arranging for another "midnight massacre." He then ordered their release, and requested them to return to their tribe, and specially to explain in person the "broad principles" upon which the British always act when "murder, treason, and rapine" unfortunately obtrude themselves in spite of our clement rule. This is not a place to make comments on such transactions as the above, as we are merely endeavouring in our own way to give a rough statement of fact, and the above is fact, but without criticising the desire to exhibit clemency on the part of the Viceroy, we cannot help thinking that people will soon have an uncomfortable feeling that the likelihood of our rulers punishing murderers is in inverse ratio to the number of persons murdered.—Indian Public Opinion.

THE VICEROY AT MULTAN.

MULTAN, Oct. 25.—The special train which conveyed the Viceroy from Lahore arrived at Multan early on the morning of the 24th, having made the journey about six hours within the ordinary mail train time. The Viceroy was received on the railway platform by the civil and military officers of the station, and by a large number of native chiefs and gentlemen who had come to Multan for the purpose of attending the durbar. The railway station was nicely decorated, and a small shamiana was pitched on the platform opposite to where the Viceroy was to alight from his carriage, with seats set apart for the accommodation of those who were entitled to them. A battery of artillery, which was posted outside the railway station, fired a royal salute on the Viceroy leaving his carriage. The procession to the camp was conducted in the usual way, except that his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief was present and rode at the head of the procession, the members of his staff taking up positions in the rear. At one o'clock on the day of his Excellency's arrival his Lordship received the Nawab of Bhawalpore at private durbar. His Highness, an intelligent looking, unassuming young gentleman, was escorted to the durbar tent by a troop of his own cavalry, and conducted to the Viceroy's presence by the Foreign Secretary, under a salute of seventeen guns. The usual ceremonies were observed at his reception, and in the afternoon the Viceroy paid a return visit to the Nawab at his own residence.

The public durbar was held at eleven o'clock this morning. Its chief interest lay in the number of independent chiefs and chiefs of the frontier tribes who were present, and in the remarks of his Excellency in presenting some of their number with dresses of honour in recognition of services rendered by them to the Government. At eleven o'clock the Nawab of Bhawalpore, with the chiefs and native gentlemen and the European officers of Government, were seated in the durbar tent awaiting the Viceroy's arrival. Immediately to the left of the dais were the civil and military officers of Government, amongst whom were the Commander-in-Chief, Sir Richard Temple; Captain Baring, Private Secretary; Colonel Earle, Military Secretary; Colonel Dillon, Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief; the Earl of Donoughmore; and a large number of ladies and gentlemen occupying seats which extended almost to the entrance of the durbar tent. On the corresponding side nearest to the Viceroy sat the Nawab of Bhawalpore; the Lieutenant-Governor; Mr. Aitchison, Foreign Secretary; and Captain Henderson, Under-Secretary in the Foreign Department; and seated according to their rank, the chiefs and native gentlemen assembled. His Excellency entered the tent a little after eleven and opened the durbar, when the ceremony of introduction was proceeded with. The most interesting feature of the ceremony now occurred, when the Viceroy presented "dresses of honour" to a number of the assembled frontier chiefs, commencing with the Nawab of Bhawalpore. His Excellency proceeded to invest Nawab Sirfraz Khan with the honour, explaining that it was conferred on him for the loyalty of himself and his family to the British Government. The next in order was Nawab Foujdar Khan, whom His Excellency addressed as follows:—"You have already received a token of the approbation of her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen.

Your services to the British Government have been long and distinguished, both at Mooltan and in the rebellion of 1857, and subsequently as the British representative at the Court of Cabul. Those services are not forgotten, and it gives me great pleasure to confer on you this dress of honour." The next to receive the honour was Syed Morad Shah, the Assistant Superintendent of the Bhawalpore State, to whom his Excellency explained that the honour was conferred on him at the recommendation of the Lieutenant-Governor, in recognition of the assistance rendered by him to the Political Agent of Bhawalpore. Immam Buksh Khan then presented himself, and was addressed by his Excellency in the following words:—"I have great pleasure in conferring on you this dress of honour in appreciation of the excellent services you have always performed in taking the leading part in the reformation and management of your tribe, and in helping the local officers of the British Government to promote friendly relations with the hill tribes on the Sind and Rajanpore borders." After Immam Buksh came Miran Khan, a rather notable character. He is the chief of the tribe of Durishaks, and has always been a staunch supporter of the British Government. It may be remembered that in August 1857 it was Miran Khan who, at the head of his troop, bravely repulsed a formidable raid, made by the Murrees on the Aznee frontier. In recognition of his gallant conduct on that occasion the Government handsomely rewarded him. On presenting himself before the Viceroy, his Lordship addressed him as follows:—"I fully appreciate your zealous endeavours to support the local officers of the British Government in maintaining peace on the border and a friendly feeling with the frontier tribes. It is known to me that your father and twenty-seven of your tribe were killed fighting for the British Government in 1857, and it gives me great pleasure to confer upon you this dress of honour." Golan Hyder Khan was next presented. He, too, is the head of an important tribe, the Gocharies, and has distinguished himself by his impartiality in the suppression of crime and his aptitude in managing the affairs of his tribe, which is said to be one of the most troublesome of all the tribes on the frontier. The Viceroy addressed him as follows:—"I confer upon you this dress of honour in recognition of your beneficial management of your tribe and of the willing assistance you have always afforded to the Deputy Commissioner of the Dera Ghazee Khan district in dealing with the independent tribes across the frontier." This ended the presentation of the honours to the more important chiefs. His Excellency the Viceroy then rose and delivered the following address:—

"NAWABS, CHIEFS, AND GENTLEMEN,—I am very glad to visit Mooltan and to receive you here to-day. I am glad also to embrace this opportunity, before I leave the Punjab, of publicly expressing my gratification at the loyalty to her Majesty the Queen which has been shown by the cordial welcome that I have received as her Majesty's representative in this ancient city and throughout the whole province. Nawab of Bhawalpore—Your Highness is now old enough to appreciate the responsibility which will devolve upon you as the ruler of one of the principal States in the Punjab. The way in which you spend the few years that remain before you are called to the government is of the utmost importance to your own reputation and to the welfare of your people. I am glad to hear that your Highness is assiduously devoting yourself to the acquirement of useful knowledge and of the other qualifications which are necessary to enable you properly to fulfil the duties of your high station.

"Chiefs of the Frontier Tribes, subjects of her Majesty the Queen,—I cordially welcome you to this durbar. Your Commissioner has informed me of the ready assistance you have given to the local officers in the maintenance of peace and good order, as well as in the promotion of friendly relations with the independent chiefs beyond the frontier.

"Independent Chiefs,—I am glad to meet so many of you here to-day, for I look upon your presence as a proof of your confidence in the British Government. As the representative of the Queen in India it is my duty to preserve peace within her Majesty's dominions, but so long as the security of our frontier is undisturbed the British Government has no desire to interfere with your independence. Our only wish is to see you prosperous and happy, cultivating the arts of peace and living in friendship one with another."

A translation of this address in Hindoostanee was read by Mr. Aitchison, the Foreign Secretary. Ukur and pan were then distributed to the Nawab of Bhawalpore and the nobles present, when the Viceroy left the durbar tent with his staff. Outside, a large number of people were collected on either side of the approach to the durbar tent, endeavouring, hopelessly, to get a glimpse of what was going on inside, while behind them, on one side at least, an indiscriminate body of horsemen with frowsy, dishevelled hair and dirty blouse pantalouns, rode about in the wildest disorder, looking like a crowd of Macbeth witches in a fog. In the evening, at ten o'clock, there was a brilliant display of fireworks at the end of the street facing the Viceroy's tent. There was the usual quantity of fire-balloons, fiery spinning wheels and rockets, with more than the ordinary amount of shouting, crushing, recrimination, and, as a necessary consequence, flourishing of policemen's batons. The Viceroy and his party leave Mooltan early in the morning for Shersha, where they will embark for Kotree. Colonel Earle, Military Secretary, detaches himself here from the Viceroy's camp, and proceeds along the Punjab Frontier to the Camp of Exercise, Hussun Abdul, &c., returning to Calcutta at the expiration of his visits. Captain Bidulph, aide-de-camp, will supply his place as Military Secretary during the remainder of the Viceroy's tour.—Pioneer Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

OPIUM IN THE CENTRAL PROVINCES.—According to the new rules for the regulation of the import, export, transport, and sale of opium in the Central Provinces, there is to be no restriction on the growth of opium, but the grower will be liable to pay a duty of eight annas per acre of the area sown.

THE LATE STORMS.—The storm of Friday last in Bengal, though accompanied by strong wind, was not a cyclone, and the damage done to the crops is not of any very serious extent. In many parts the crops have been much benefited by the heavy rain, especially in Patna and Bhágalpur.—Englishman, Nov. 1.

THE CHOLERA AT FAIZABAD.—We have before us a summary of the cholera cases reported to the military authorities as having occurred at Fyzabad during the recent outbreak of the epidemic in the cantonments there. Fifty cases occurred amongst the 26th Cameronians, of which thirty-one ended fatally. The Artillery had thirteen men down with the disease, of whom six died.—Lucknow Times.

MEDICAL.—We understand that Dr. G. S. Beatson, C.B., Inspector-General of Hospitals, British troops, has been appointed Principal Medical officer to the Camp of Exercise, and that Deputy Inspectors General Dr. T. Crawford, of the Sirhind Circle, and Dr. T. Best, Peshawar Circle—both of the British Service—and Dr. G. Bannister, of the Rawul Pindee Circle, Indian Service, are to be attached one to each of the three Divisions. Surgeon W. R. Stewart, of the Royal Horse Artillery, is to be in charge of the General Field Hospital of the Camp.

INDIGO.—Those interested in indigo manufacture in Bengal are apparently overburdened with a too abundant crop. An average season of 90,000 maunds gives a full return in price to the grower. A proclaimed certainty of 130,000 maunds for this year's crop has resulted in a complete depression of the trade. Buyers are holding back, and expect to fill up their requirements fully Rs. 130 a maund below the prices of last year. From the result of the October sales reported from London at Rs. 35 a maund below last July's prices, season 1872 for indigo is likely to be a cheap one, and planters will probably pray next year for a less bountiful outturn.

NATIVE STUDENTS AT ROORKEE.—A new phase in the education of assistant engineers has developed itself at Roorkee. The Bengalee students doing their surveys of a morning appear to be quite a spectacle. With horses at the rate of one between two, they ride by turns. Some in faultless European costume, others in the brightest of Oriental colours, and in jack-boots, may be seen with what appears to be a lance, but in reality is a survey flag, in hand, scouring the plain after the manner of "covers" in a lancer regiment taking up points. Could Mr. Campbell but see these performances he would be disposed to reconsider his opinion as to the disposition of this class for equestrian exercises.—Pioneer, Oct. 29.

MORE CHANGES.—There is no doubt that the Central Provinces is to be abolished, and that the several districts are to be divided between Bombay and the North-Western Provinces. The Central Provinces are now garrisoned, and expensively garrisoned, too, by Madras troops, who will, in the event of the above-mentioned arrangement, no longer be stationed there, Bengal and Bombay furnishing the troops for their respective stations in the Central Provinces. This change will effect a considerable saving in more than one way, and if the proposed scheme for governing the Province answers equally well, and we do not see why it should not,—there will be no cause to complain. But there may be a bone to quarrel over in the shape of coal fields—and we are curious to see which of the two Provinces concerned will get it. We would wager a trifle in favour of the North-West Provinces. But it will be a sad "sell" to the winner if he finds the said bone empty, and not worth the trouble of squabbling over.—Civil and Military Gazette.

THE INEFFICIENT OFFICERS.—The orders of the Secretary of State, recently promulgated, regarding the treatment of unemployed and inefficient officers of the Indian Army, are about to be carried out. Letters will be immediately issued, offering unemployed officers the option of residing in England on the English pay of their ranks, such leave counting towards their colonel's allowances; and also other letters, placing on half pay the tares of the service. The first class are liable to be ordered to India should their services be required; the second is numerically a very small one. Doubtless here are many employed officers who would gladly avail themselves of the first offer were they permitted to do so, but to bar this they are not allowed to vacate their incumbencies. The principle, once a priest always a priest, now applies to Indian staff officers. It appears to us that exchanges between employed and unemployed officers of equal rank, qualifications, and service might be sanctioned, where the object of the first officer is to take English pay, and with financial advantage to the State.—Indian Daily News.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT R. T. OMMANNEY.—Lieutenant R. T. Ommanney, of the 107th Regiment, died at Barrackpur on the 22nd inst. of malarious fever.

A SAILORS' STRIKE AT CALCUTTA.—The sailors in Calcutta have been endeavouring, by marching in procession in the streets with flags and music, to bring about a strike. The inmates of the Sailors' Home turned out in a body on Oct. 17, and marched in procession towards Flag-street, to meet their comrades there, and to act in concert. While passing the Police compound, the Commissioner of Police ordered their arrest, and a number of police constables were sent off for that purpose. The only offence upon which the men could have been arrested was that they had no licence for playing musical instruments in the streets. Before the police could get to them they had put away the instruments, and marched gravely down the street with their banners flying. Mr. Superintendent Percy, with the constables, was obliged to march with the procession to keep order, and the Jacks felt quite proud at the police honouring them with their presence. From inquiries made by the superintendent, the men said they were determined to stick out for higher wages. They saw no reason why they should not get the same rate of wages as was ruling in Liverpool, London, and other places, which was £3 10s.; while in Calcutta the rate was £2 10s. The boarding houses charge them £3 per month, and the only place where they could get cheaper lodging was the Sailors' Home, and there they had to pay £2 10s., which was all they got a month for their labour, and there was nothing left for contingencies. The men dispersed after some speechifying, and no disturbance of any kind occurred.

FATAL ACCIDENT TO A SOLDIER OF THE 21ST HUSSARS.—I was very sorry to hear of a sad accident to one of the 21st Hussars, which, in twenty hours, proved fatal. It appears four soldiers of that corps went out shooting early on Thursday morning, at about five miles from Dilkhoosha. When about to return home, one of them, whose gun was loaded with shot, not wishing to take it in that state into the barracks, attempted to fire it in the air; the cap did not explode, which induced the soldier to bring the piece horizontally, and in endeavouring to take off the cap that had missed fire, and to fix on a fresh cap, the cock of the gun's lock fell, and the cap that did not on trial go off exploded, and, to the horror of the sportsman, the gun went off and the whole of its contents lodged in the hip of his comrade, who, unfortunately, happened to be standing some few paces in front, and who at once fell; the shot would appear to have entered the bladder and intestines of the wounded man, and being small and numerous no skill could extract them. A dooly was at once procured, and the individual who caused the injury ran the whole way by the side of the dooly into Cantonment; he was at once placed in custody; the wounded man continued to his death in extreme bodily agony, while the soldier who was the cause of it has been suffering much agony of mind since. Indeed, it is said he wept bitterly on learning in his confinement that his comrade had died of his wound; some kind friend should console the unfortunate man, who, it is said, has been made over to the Civil authorities to stand his formal trial for the death of his comrade.—Lucknow Times.

Madras.

THE VELLORE SCANDAL.—Mr. Thornhill, of the Civil Service, and Colonel Batten, of the 17th Regiment N.I., have been appointed by the Madras Government to enquire into and report upon the Vellore Scandal.

MILITARY HEAD-QUARTERS.—The head-quarters of the Madras army were to be re-established in Madras on the 1st Nov. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, accompanied by Major St. Hill, Aide-de-Camp, left Ootakamand on the 29th Oct. for Bangalore, and thence proceeded on a tour of inspection to Bellary, Secunderabad and Kamptee. His Excellency's suite consists of the Adjutant-General, Quartermaster-General, and an Aide-de-Camp.

THE LEAK IN THE RED HILLS LAKE.—The following letter from the Senior Police Magistrate to the local Athenæum is worthy of republication:—"Sir,—I consider, and it is the unanimous opinion of all thoughtful men in Madras, as far as my knowledge goes, that the gratitude of the Madras public is due to you for the salvation of the city. It is all very well to comment now and make strictures and talk of exaggerations, and say your warning was not needed; but the fact that the valuable calingulah has had to be demolished in part is proof sufficient that there was danger to Madras when you raised the cry of warning. If I only thought so it would be nothing. But this is the opinion I hear expressed by all the best-informed in this town, and as a man of public spirit I beg to come forward and state so publicly. You have played your part as a true friend to public interests nobly and well.—Yours sincerely, T. G. CLARKE."

M. FARON'S UKASE.—Fancy Pondicherry, which Sir Charles Trevelyan in a gushing moment designated the Paris of India, donning the sombre garb of Puritanism and eschewing—

"Songs and quavers, roaring, humming, Guitars, and every other sort of strumming."

M. Faron, the Governor, has set his austere face against the people of Pondicherry dancing, and woe to the "festive cuss" of an official who is discovered tripping on the light fantastic toe. The Governor's reason for this prohibition is highly patriotic and slightly absurd. He thinks that the Terpsichorean art should be repudiated by Frenchmen so long as the hated Prussians occupy any portion of the "sacred soil" of France. The Governor's evenings at home are lenten entertainments, in which, beside dance, music, save of a semi-religious character, is strictly tabooed.—Madras Standard, Oct. 28.

TOO BAD.—A curious railway story comes to us which is rather unique in its way. Some time ago the employees in a certain station on the Madras Railway decided on welcoming back one of their superior officers from leave to England with a grand ball and supper. The ball was given, the supper eaten, the guest of the evening heartily toasted to the tune of—"he's a jolly good fellow," and in point of fact all went off as merrily as a marriage ball. After pleasure, however, comes pain, and a week or two subsequently what was the disgust of the employees aforesaid to find that their pay was reduced all round, at the suggestion of the "jolly good fellow" they had so hospitably entertained, who naturally argued that if guards, engine-drivers and the like could afford to give entertainments, which even their betters would have found it hard to do, they were a great deal too well off for their station in life. The moral is obvious, and we fancy it will be a pretty long time before another ball of the kind comes off.—Bangalore Herald, Oct. 19.

OBITUARY.—It is with feelings of the deepest regret that we chronicle the death of the senior advocate of the local bar, Mr. Malous Agabeg. This untimely event took place on Saturday last at his residence in Sparks-street. Although latterly in failing health, the gentleman carried on business to the last, and was in Court only last Thursday. The news of his death came suddenly and unexpectedly on the whole town. Amongst his brother advocates his courteous disposition and the kindly feeling he bore to the juniors in his profession will long make him remembered at the bar, while amongst his large circle of clients, European and native, the assiduous attention with which he laboured for them, and the unswerving integrity with which he conducted a very large business, will make his loss felt throughout many houses in the province. The deceased became some months ago the proprietor of the Rangoon Gazette, and we tender our contemporary our hearty sympathy on the loss which he has sustained.—Rangoon Mail, Oct. 16.

THE WATER SUPPLY OF BOMBAY.

Major Tulloch's report on the water-supply of Bombay is a heavy volume, teeming with facts and figures, and filled with a large number of well-executed maps. Not only Salsette, but all the country embraced between Panwell on the north-east, and Bassein on the north-west, with the ghaut line for a base, has been trodden by the municipal surveyors in search of new sites for an additional water-supply for Bombay. The result of this search has been to place before the public two projects which, it is said, are entirely new, viz., the Tansa and Kamun projects. The other five projects discussed in the report—viz., the Shewla, Ewoor, Kennery, Toolsee, and Vchar extension—are not new to Bombay, though the surveys appear to have been more completely made by Major Tulloch, and the projects themselves more completely worked out than they were by any of his predecessors. On these five schemes the ground had previously been somewhat prepared for Major Tulloch by the partial surveys of former Municipal Engineers, by Mr. Scoble's water supply commission, and by Mr. Ormiston's elaborate report on the Toolsee scheme, so that practically Major Tulloch's report throws no new light on the extension of our water-supply as far as these schemes are concerned, if we except the cost of executing Ewoor, which had not before been estimated nor the height of the dams determined.

The report terminates with the following recommendations:—

Either to carry out the Kennery and Toolsee projects for the supply of eight-and-a-quarter million gallons daily, or to carry out the Tansa project for a supply of thirteen million gallons.

If the former be decided upon, the Toolsee main dam to be built at once—or, at all events, so as to admit of its being raised hereafter—to the height of 105 feet, so that the water may stand at 470 feet on datum, and a three years' supply from the valley be impounded. And the Kennery dam to be built at once—or so as to admit of its being raised afterwards—to the height of 155 feet, so that the water may stand at 345 feet on datum, and a three years' supply from the lower portion of the valley may be impounded.

That future works should be, if possible, extensions of present ones, and not independent of them.

That in carrying out any high-level project whatsoever, it would be a grave mistake not to command the Vchar Lake so as to be able to keep it full whenever considered desirable.

That, whatever reservoir be adopted, if the height for the dams proposed by me be not approved, the dams be, at all events, built so as to be capable of being raised in the future to those heights. Thus the prospective supply would not be marred by any steps taken to relieve our own immediate wants.

That the water from every high-level reservoir which may be constructed be brought by conduit as near to Bombay as possible, i. e., to the upper Koorla reservoir, before being delivered under pressure.

That conduits be adopted in preference to pipes wherever they are practicable, whether in open cutting or in tunnelling.

That an experiment be made to ascertain to what extent the temperature of the water in a main exposed to the sun would be affected, and, if the temperature be not affected so as to render the water practically warmer than it would be in a main under ground, that all pipes laid down hereafter for the supply of Bombay be placed on standards above ground.

Miscellaneous.

PUBLIC HOLIDAYS.—It has been officially notified that, in honour of the expected visit of H.E. the Viceroy to this presidency, the Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to declare Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, the 14th, 15th, and 16th November next, to be public holidays. All officers who can be spared from their duties are invited to be present in Bombay to do honour to his Excellency the Viceroy. Heads of offices will make arrangements for the despatch of emergent business.

MILITARY.—We have heard that it is most likely the 56th Regiment will not have its usual tour of Indian service, owing to the approaching organisation of the depot centre system in England. As the other regiment with which the 56th is linked is also in India, it is highly probable that the latter, having been the longest in India, will go home next year. It is stated that fifteen battalions or regiments will go home shortly without regard to their position in the foreign service poster. This is good news for the 56th, as they have suffered much from sickness since their arrival in this land.—Deccan Herald.

THE MONEY ORDER SYSTEM.—We hear that the Money Order Agency in connexion with our Post Office is doing good work. Within the last three weeks nearly 16,000 rupees were remitted to England. When it comes into full operation, Government will no doubt be greatly profited. People who have to remit small sums to England will find it very convenient to have recourse to this Agency. It bids fair to become popular. But we would suggest the advisability of translating the rules of this new system into the Vernaculars, and circulating them among our native traders, &c., when they know its details they will avail themselves of its advantages. As yet the major portion of the people have no knowledge of the regulations of the office.—Argus.

A SOCIETY FOR THE RELIEF OF HINDOO WIDOWS.—The recent successful remarriages amongst the Hindoos, together with the countenance which these reformers received from the influential Hindoos of Bombay and the dinner given by Mr. Girdharlal Dyaldas Kothari in honour of the remarried couples, seem to have combined to strengthen the cause of the reformers. We are glad to hear that a society called the "Hindoo Vidhava Dookha Nivaharan Mandli" (Society for Relieving the Miseries of the Hindoo Widows) is being formed under the auspices of several leading Hindoo gentlemen of Bombay, and that the society has undertaken the noble task of ameliorating the condition of poor Hindoo widows, and of supporting remarriages and such other reforms.

MAN-EATING TIGERS AT MAHABLESHWUR.—We regret to learn from the letter of our Mahabaleshwur correspondent, that two natives, a man and a woman, have been killed by tigers whilst engaged in grazing their cattle near that station. They were both killed within a few days of each other, the man on the 19th, and the woman on the 21st inst., and these sad depredations would appear to have been committed in the vicinity of Babington Point and Mount Douglas; from which it may be inferred that one and the same animal—a man-eater—destroyed both these unfortunate persons. A large reward should at once be offered for the destruction of this monster, or further depredations will be likely to occur. Not a year passes but fatal accidents from tigers are reported from Mahabaleshwur; and since the departure of their deadly foe, Sir Seymour Fitzgerald, they have been keeping high jinks, there being no shikarees amongst the present visitors to these hills to rid the place of these pests.—Deccan Herald, Oct. 25.

SIR W. MEREWETHER.—Sir W. Merewether, Chief Commissioner of Sind, was in April last ordered to Bombay on duty, and was absent from Sind for a month. The Financial Department at Bombay refused to sanction the payment of his full salary during his absence, and Sir William was obliged to appeal to the Government of India. That Government has granted him full pay, as his absence was caused by his being summoned to Bombay on duty, and in doing so it has laid down the following rules for future guidance:—"The Governor-General in Council is at the same time pleased to rule that no officer is entitled to pay or allowances for any time he may spend beyond the limits of his jurisdiction, save with the sanction of the Government which he serves, and that the confirmation of the Government of India is required to such sanction when it involves any increase of expenditure beyond what would have been incurred if the officer had remained within his jurisdiction. No order passed under this resolution authorising an officer to quit his jurisdiction, justifies him in charging travelling allowance, unless such travelling allowance is specifically sanctioned."

A ROMANCE OF ANGLO-INDIAN LIFE.—By the s.s. Walamo, which arrived in Bombay harbour a few days ago from England, there had been shipped two young ladies, whose destination was some kind of mission work on "India's coral strand," but during the voyage out one of the young ladies and a gentleman passenger fell very friendly, and, whether or not they talked much about the adaptability of Christianity to Hindoos, this we know, that they must have admired the philosophy of Benedick and determined to act according to his example. Some missionary gentlemen in Bombay had been appointed to receive the young ladies, and they innocently proceeded on board the Walamo when she arrived, having no doubt whatever that their charges, who were bound down to a five years' engagement, were all right. Only one lady, however, presented herself. The missionary gentleman asked every one around for the other lady, but could get nothing beyond a musical, mischievous laugh from the feminine portion of the passengers and a shake of the head from the male portion thereof. Suspecting something to be amiss, they slipped over the ship's side into their boat, and made all haste for shore. Instinctively they went to the Cathedral, where they arrived just in time to see the young lady they were seeking for step out of the door leaning on the arm of the young man who had lived to prove that love laughs at "five years' bonds" as well as locksmiths. The husband of the lady, accompanied by the captain of the Walamo, has called on the editor of the Bombay Gazette and demanded the name of the writer of the above paragraph. On his request being refused he threatened legal proceedings, stating that the matter was libellous. It is rumoured that the marriage was prearranged by the thoughtful bridegroom telegraphing from Suez to somebody in Bombay to have a license ready for him whenever the Walamo should arrive.—Bombay Gazette.

NEW DRILL AND TACTICS.

The following memoranda, signed by Sir Archibald Alison, have been issued at Aldershot during the week:—

ON THE FORMATION OF HALF BATTALION DOUBLE COLUMNS, AT QUARTER DISTANCE.

1. Battalions will usually be formed first in eight companies, and then again told off into four double companies.

2. They will be told off into double companies as follows:—1 and 2 companies—1st double company; 3 and 4—2nd double company, and so on.

3. When not otherwise ordered they will form column of double companies in rear of one of the flank double companies.

4. Thus one half battalion will always be the front and the other the rear half of the column.

5. When a brigade in line of battalion double company columns is ordered to deploy into line of half battalion double columns, at deploying intervals, to the left, the leading half battalion of the right column will stand fast, the remainder will form "fours left" and march off, and each half battalion will, on gaining its proper interval, "front turn," and "half-dress up" on the alignment.

6. The adjutants of the battalions will, as usual, give the points where the outer flanks of their respective battalions will rest.

7. There will be the usual interval of thirty paces between battalions, but only deploying interval between half battalions, unless it is intended that the half battalions should go on acting independently when deployed, in which case twelve paces interval in addition will be ordered.

8. Officers commanding half battalions will generally judge their own intervals; but when great accuracy is necessary then foot points for each half battalion column will be given by its base markers (in the same way as for a line of battalion columns at less than deploying intervals).

9. When half battalions deploy into line, and no interval between them has been ordered, the lieutenant colonel will assume the command, and they will become one battalion. But if twelve paces, in addition to deploying interval, has been ordered, then the majors will still continue in command of their respective half battalions, and the lieut. colonels will exercise a general superintendence.

10. When half battalions are formed one colour will go with each.

11. When a line of battalion quarter columns is ordered to deploy into line of half battalion double columns, at deploying intervals, it will be done on exactly the same principle as a deployment from a line of double company columns—each half battalion forming double companies on the march in the same way as for marching past.

12. Half-battalion double columns deploy into line to a flank, unless otherwise specially ordered.

13. When battalions are so weak that they cannot be formed into eight companies, they will be told off into six. In this case they will usually be formed into single, not double, half-battalion columns.

14. When, however, it is considered necessary to form them in double half-battalion columns, the following course will be adopted:—(One double company will be in front with the other single company of the same half battalion in rear of its outer flank (that is, in the right half battalion the odd company will be in rear of the right, in the left half battalion in rear of the left).)

ON FORMATIONS FOR ATTACK.

1.—OF A BATTALION ACTING ALONE.

It will be formed either (1) in line of half-battalion single columns at deploying interval, covered by the first company of each half battalion skirmishing, and the second in support. Or (2) one half battalion will extend, two companies skirmishing and two in support, and be followed by the other half battalion in double company column or line, according to circumstances. In either case the supports will be 300 yards in front of the main body, the skirmishers 200 yards in front of the supports. The supports will be with open files, that is, with two paces between each file. The main body will always deploy when under fire.

II.—OF A BRIGADE.

(1) Two half battalions of the same battalion will cover the front of the brigade, each with two companies skirmishing, and two in support. This battalion may be taken either from one of the flanks, or from the centre of the brigade. When the brigade consists of an odd number of battalions, and the formation for attack is made from line, or line of columns at deploying intervals, the latter course will often be found the quickest and best. When circumstances of ground render it advisable the skirmishers may advance by ranks—the front rank 100 yards or so in advance of the rear rank. On any check occurring the rear rank will at once reinforce the front rank. The supports will be with open files 200 or 300 yards in rear of the skirmishers.

(2) The remaining battalions in line of half battalion double columns, at deploying distance, 300 or 400 yards in rear of the supports.

(3) The half battalions will be commanded by the majors. The lieut. col. of each battalion will take a general charge of the whole. He will not, however, repeat the brigadier's words of command.

III.—OF A BRIGADE OF FOUR BATTALIONS ACTING ALONE.

The same, except that one battalion will be placed as a reserve 500 or 600 yards in rear of the centre, if possible under cover, and either in battalion or half-battalion double columns.

IV.—OF A DIVISION OF THREE BRIGADES.

Two brigades in line with one another in the same formation as in No. II. The third in reserve, 500 or 600 yards in rear of the centre, in line of battalion or half-battalion double columns, at 30 paces interval, or more if required.

V.

In advancing, a half battalion will be named to direct. The support in front of this half battalion will be the support of direction. The skirmishers in front of it again the skirmishers of direction.

VI.—OF THE CAVALRY AND ARTILLERY OF A DIVISION.

When a division is formed for attack in an open plain, in the order described in No. 4, there should be a battery of artillery on each flank in line with, or in any favourable position to the rear of the main line, and such battery should have a regiment of cavalry in echelon on its outer flank. If a battery cannot be spared then a half battery. And so with the cavalry, if a regiment is not disposable, then a wing, a squadron, or a troop. The remainder of the cavalry and artillery should be placed in rear of the centre, behind, or on the flanks of, the reserve infantry, and whenever possible, covered both from observation and fire. When it is desirable to bring the reserve artillery and cavalry into action, they can either come up on a flank, or they can pass straight through the intervals between the half battalion columns of the infantry line. It will be found that artillery can pass through the infantry most readily by moving in half batteries. There is always room for a half battery to pass between the half battalion columns of the weakest line battalion. When artillery have once got into action in a good position they should be moved as seldom as possible. The advance of the infantry should always be preceded by a concentrated fire of artillery on the point selected for attack.

ON CHANGES OF FRONT.

I.—OF A BRIGADE ACTING ALONE AND WITHOUT A RESERVE.

TO THE RIGHT.

1. The half battalion on the right wheels to the right, and extends from its left into a line of skirmishers and one of supports.

2. The next half battalion of the same corps moves up on the left of the preceding, and extends in the same manner from its right.

3. Those two cover the front of the whole brigade.

4. They advance until they gain the required distance from the third half battalion.

5. This last wheels to the right and forms the base for the formation of the new line. Its left half battalion comes up on its left.

6. The half battalions of the next regiment come up by the shortest line on its right.

7. The two half battalions which covered the front of the old line in extended order close on their left or centre (out of fire), reform half battalions, and take post in the general line on the left.

8. Should there be only three battalions in the brigade, then the fourth half battalion of the original line will come up on the right of the third—the old extended half battalions forming the left of the new line.

II.—OF A BRIGADE ACTING ALONE WITH A RESERVE.

The same as the above, except that the reserve will form the right wing on the right of the half battalion of formation. The half battalions next on the left to the half battalion of formation forming on its left. The old extended half battalions becoming the reserve.

III.—OF A DIVISION OF THREE BRIGADES.

(1) RIGHT BRIGADE.

2. The third half battalion wheels to its right and becomes the base for the new formation.

3. The remaining half battalions of the brigade move up on its left into line by the shortest lines.

4. The two old extended half battalions form the two left half battalions of the new line.

(2) LEFT BRIGADE.

The two extended half battalions close to their outer flank reform half battalion double columns, and join the remainder of the brigade, which proceeds by the shortest way to form the reserve to the new line, at the proper distance in rear of its centre, and in the usual formation.

(3) RESERVE.

The right battalion wheels to its right and sends its two half battalions to extend in succession to the right the new line of skirmishers and supports. The remaining battalions, if not already in half battalion double columns, will adopt that formation, and proceed in the most direct way to form on the right of the half battalion of formation of the new line. Should the change of front be ordered to the left it will be executed on exactly the same principles.

IV.—OF A DIVISION (OR BRIGADE) WHEN IN CONTACT WITH THE ENEMY.

A change of front such as the above, though necessary for the purposes of drill, would rarely be required on service, and could only be executed in the case of a flank attack when the front was not engaged with the enemy. In war, when there is any expectation of a flank attack, a division will always advance with a brigade or battalion kept back in echelon on its exposed flank, and on such an attack being developed this brigade or battalion will at once change front to meet it, throwing out skirmishers and supports in the usual way. The old skirmishing battalion will hold the enemy in check on the original front, and the reserve will be at once brought up to extend and strengthen the flank now threatened. Any battalion disposable from the opposite flank of the original line will be immediately got together and brought to the rear of the centre to constitute a new reserve.

V.—OF ANY BODY HALF RIGHT, OR AT ANY LESSER ANGLE.

Should the change of front be half right, or any lesser angle, it will be better to execute it by changing front the required angle on the right half battalion of the line, or on a central one, as laid down in Sections 16 and 17, part IV., of the "Field Exercise."

VI.—OF A SINGLE BATTALION.

When a single battalion in line of half battalion column changes front it should always do so as in No. V.

VII.—OF THE CAVALRY AND ARTILLERY OF A DIVISION.

When a complete change of front is made the artillery and cavalry on that flank towards which it is made will immediately wheel to the flank and advance, taking up the best position they can to cover the formation of the infantry line in their rear. Cavalry and artillery will be despatched from the reserve to cover the inner flank of the new formation. The cavalry and horse artillery on the outer flank of the old formation will cross by the shortest line to the outer flank of the new one. Or cavalry and artillery may be sent from the reserve. Any artillery and cavalry which may have been in front of the old line, will, unless otherwise ordered, proceed at once to join the new reserve, taking care that in doing so they always move so as not to impede the progress of the infantry engaged in taking up the new position.

GENERAL NORMAN.—The Calcutta correspondent of the Times, taking his cue from the Indian Press, seems to imagine that there is some chance of General Norman's succeeding Lord Napier in the Indian Command. We would recommend those who have allowed themselves to be led away by General Norman's words to turn to page 4 of the Monthly Army List, and they will then be enabled to judge for themselves whether or not there be any chance of their anticipations being realised. For our own part, we see nothing in what General Norman is reported to have said to justify for a moment the inferences which have been drawn. We ask how would it be possible for either the India Office or the Horse Guards to nominate an officer who is junior in the service to every Major-General over whom he would be placed? Common sense ought at once to dispel the idea. The Indian Press jumps at strange conclusions at times, and having done so, it is wonderful with what an amount of tenacity it sticks to them.—Army and Navy Gazette.

Home.

THE CASE OF MAJOR EYRE.

Major Eyre entered the service of the Honourable East India Company in 1826, and served without intermission, except eleven months of sick leave, for a period of thirty-two years. He was gazetted Cornet in 1826; and in 1858, on obtaining home leave for eighteen months, he was senior Major of the Bombay Cavalry, having passed through every grade of officership during his long service. A man of robust constitution, the eighteen months' home leave would have renovated his health and rendered him quite capable of attaining the highest rank in the profession to which he had devoted himself with so much advantage to his country, from his youth. He was, however, as he states in his petition to the House of Commons, surprised to find, on his return to Ireland, that he was gazetted as permitted to retire from the service, although he never had asked such permission, as is usual in such cases. He was merely granted the paltry pension of £400 a-year, whereas he would, eight years ago, have in the regular course of promotion been Major-General, which would entitle him, we understand, to a retiring pension of £1,300 a-year. No wonder, smarting under such a wrong, that Major Eyre believes illegitimate means were resorted to to force him out of the service. He states in his petition, and we have no doubt truly, that his money losses by the compulsory retirement inflicted on him amount in the aggregate to £25,000. This to Major Eyre, considering that he has a wife and family of nine children, is a most serious matter, and must be calculated to embitter his declining years; for he would seem as justly entitled to the money as the Governor-General of India is to his munificent salary.

We learn, from the petition, that Major Eyre has appealed for redress to every successive Secretary of State for India since 1858, but without success. Failing the Indian authorities he had addressed the House of Commons, praying that justice may be done him; and we don't see how his petition can possibly be rejected.

Considering that Major Eyre is a member of one of our most respectable county families, we somewhat wondered that his petition should be presented by Sir Patrick O'Brien. Of course there is nothing in it; but we feel certain our own members, both for the county and town, will support the prayer of the petition. Mr. Mitchell Henry is indefatigable in his exertions when any question affecting even the humblest of his constituents is brought before him; and Major Le Poer Trench must feel a personal interest in seeing that justice is done a brother officer. We feel certain we may promise for Lord St. Lawrence, and Sir Rowland Blennerhassett, that they will render every assistance to our county representatives. — Galway Vindicator.

MODEL OF THE NEW CHANNEL STEAMER.

Some short time ago the attention of idlers on the Greenwich shore was attracted to the movements of a tiny steamer of peculiar construction, which, worked by internal mechanism, darted to and fro across the Thames, without either steersman to its double hulls, or crew of any kind on board. This was the first working model made of Captain Dicey's double steam boat, 400 feet long, for carrying passengers in large numbers across the Channel. Since the above experiments were made, the scheme for rendering the channel passage easier to passenger boats by consulting the navigation, and overcoming the rough and chopping sea often prevailing, has developed into the form of a public company, which is prepared to build large steamers on Captain Dicey's principle. That the form of a twin-boat of the outrigger build to make such passages at sea as that between Dover and Calais is a sound idea, is proved by reference to the fact that similarly constructed vessels have long since been used on the Indian coast as improvements upon the old catamarans or rafts. We have described in the Mail several examples of the twin-skiffs, plying at Madras, the Fiji Islands, &c. Some of these vessels carrying between one hundred and two hundred tons burden will ride steadily in a heavy swell that causes a large steamer to roll its ports under water.

Last week we visited the offices of the Channel Steamship Company, 150, Leadenhall-street, and had an opportunity of examining a model of the kind of boat Captain Dicey has invented. The model exhibited is a toy steamer, being the diminutive representative of the great steamer yet to be built on Captain Dicey's patent. The model is 7 feet in length, 75 inches in breadth, and of similar depth. This elegantly shaped and graceful model steamer has two hulls parallel to each other, representing the hulls of the large ship, whose dimensions above referred to are 400 feet long, 20 feet beam, and 20 feet depth of hold, secured together by means of girders, at a distance of 35 feet apart, with the propelling paddles working between the two hulls. Each hull is seen in the model to be, as intended in the real ship, very sharp at each end, and flat in the floor. Estimating the draught of water at 6 feet, the dimensions of the real ship (shown to scale in the model) will give a clear side out of the water between the two vessels of 14 feet, and will admit of girders of this depth, of a slightly arched form, being placed between the two hulls—the upper part under the deck, the lower part just above the water-line, as seen in the model. At each section of the hulls where the girders are placed, there is a bulk head within the hull, strengthened with angle iron, and bolted and secured to the girder on the outside, thereby carrying the strength of the girder through the two hulls, from the outside of one to the outside of the other. By this arrangement the depth of the bulk head in the immersed portion of the hull also forms a part of the main girder from the one hull to the other. The deck of the vessel is continued over the girders between the two hulls, giving ample space for saloon and cabin accommodation.

The boilers and engines are placed in the hulls of the vessel below the main deck, where ample room is seen for coals and other stores. On closer inspection of the model we notice that the inner side of each hull is not of the ordinary form, but is straight from stem to stern like an ordinary vessel cut in two lengthwise; this allows of a free passage of water between each hull; the straightness of the hulls and the height of the vessel out of the water will also admit of paddle wheels of great diameter (represented in the model) being placed between the hulls; so that by means of engines placed in each hull the high speed of the vessel is ensured. The vessel has a rudder at each end, to admit of entering and leaving a port without the necessity for turning round. The outside of both hulls is clear, so that it can enter the harbours without the obstruction of outside paddle boxes. Nothing of this sort disfigures the model, or will so disfigure the new Channel steamer. There is no awkwardness of appearance whatever about the model, as might be imagined would be seen in a double-ship attached by great iron girders; indeed, the external shape is that of a ship "one and indivisible." A model of the new ship is now being shown at the United Service Institution, Scotland-yard. Nothing is seen of the girders, which are hidden by the walls of the vessel. The merits of the twin-ship principle will, we hear, be manifested in a few days by the performance of a working double-steamer, of about the displacement of the Citizen boats, when the public will be invited to witness her trials and judge for themselves, by comparison with one of the river boats on a sea way at the entrance of the Thames.

INDIAN COTTON.

Owing to climatic and other influences, the staple of Indian cotton is unfortunately short, and not so well adapted to spinning as American, Egyptian, and other superior varieties. Until the commencement of the American civil war, and the consequent scarcity of cotton, the demand for "Surats," as Indian cotton was generally called, was comparatively small, both in the United Kingdom and on the continent of Europe. The year 1862, however, saw the manufacturers glad to get almost any description of cotton for their mills, and then came a great demand for the despised Surats, at prices far beyond the native cultivators' wildest hopes. Although the quantity that up to that time had found its way to Europe was, comparatively speaking, inconsiderable, cotton had always been cultivated on a large scale in India, chiefly for local consumption, and for exportation to China and elsewhere. The crop is one well adapted to the soil of many of the more fertile provinces of India, and is well understood by and popular among the peasantry. The consequence of the greatly enhanced prices offered for the produce was a remarkable extension of the cultivation of cotton throughout India, accompanied by the withdrawal of some quantities from local consumption. It is not very easy to collect accurate statistics of the area under cotton cultivation throughout all the provinces and presidencies in India. In some cases, the returns prepared are merely rough estimates, but, on the whole, they give a fair idea of the effect on the cultivation of the sudden rise in the price of cotton. Thus, for instance, in the Central Provinces of India, the area under cotton cultivation in the year 1862 was 375,000 acres. In the year 1865 it rose to 690,000 acres; and although of recent years the cultivation has followed the prices, and has somewhat fallen off, there are still about 600,000 acres sown with cotton in those provinces. In the adjoining district of the Berars, in which some of the best Indian cotton is grown, the proportion of increase was hardly less than that noticed above, and the same may be said of the extension of cultivation in the Bombay Presidency.

In Mr. Kipling's very clever sketches, and in the series of photographs contributed by Mr. Fitz-Gerald and Mr. Dunlop, the hon. secretaries respectively of the Bombay and Bera committees for the Exhibition, a very accurate idea is given of the manner in which the trade is carried on in the interior of India, and at Bombay and Calcutta, where most of the cotton is sent for export. Space will not permit of the subject being dwelt upon at any length in this paper. But it is to be noted that the extension of railway communication has, of late years, quite revolutionised the trade. In old days, when the chief cotton markets in the interior were separated from the seaboard, by three weeks' journey over almost impassable roads, it was hardly to be expected that many European merchants would penetrate into the districts, and carry on business at out-of-the-way markets. The trade was then entirely in the hands of native dealers and the cotton, before it reached Bombay, besides having to undergo a long journey across difficult country and along indifferent roads, had to pass through the hands of many middlemen, whose interest in preserving it from dirt and damage was often small. The European merchant at the seaport was obliged to take what he could get. And this, as a rule, was cotton not inferior in staple to that which is produced in the present day, but which, from careless picking, bad picking, and too often from admixture with inferior cottons grown in other parts of India, was not fit for any but the most ordinary class of work. The railways have now connected Bombay with Allahabad, Madras, Nagpore, Calcutta, and Lahore, and nearly all the cotton markets in India have been brought into easy communication with the most important ports of shipment. Heavy machinery (to transport which over the roads of the interior was formerly a physical impossibility) can now with ease be carried to any of the up-country markets. The introduction of machinery has of late years largely increased, and in addition to the steam machines for cleaning the cotton already noticed, there is hardly an important market in the interior which is not now supplied with powerful steam-pressers for packing the cotton for export. The number of European merchants settled in the interior has increased in like proportion, and the consequence is that the cotton grown in a district, instead of passing through the hands of a series of middlemen, and being sent carelessly packed to the seaboard, is now brought direct from the cultivator by the European agent, and then packed on the spot, in full-pressed bales, and sent by railway direct to Bombay for shipment.

Of recent years the Government of India paid much attention to the improvement of cotton cultivation. Attempts have been made to introduce foreign varieties, but the result has not been satisfactory, save in the Dharwar country in the south of the Bombay Presidency, where the New Orleans cotton seed has been successfully acclimatised. In the Dharwar country, however, the climate is exceptionally favourable, and the foreign plant is cultivated there under conditions which cannot be secured for it in other parts of India. Endeavours have, therefore, been made to improve the indigenous plant, which, though inferior to its American rival, produces a very fairly satisfactory cotton. With this view, model farms have been established, under the charge of trained European superintendents, in the chief cotton-growing tracts of the Bombay Presidency and in the Berars, Central Provinces, North-West Provinces, and in Madras. The experiments, so far as they have gone, seem to indicate that the staple of the Broach, Hingunghat, and of the superior Indian cottons, are about as good as can be grown under all the conditions of climate and soil with which the plant has to contend in India. But although there appears to be small prospect of improving the length of the staple, it is hoped that the yield may be increased by improved cultivation, and to this subject, which in the present state of the cotton trade is of great importance, much attention is being paid at the model farms established by the Government. The question all turns upon the cost of the improvements. Greater care in cultivation means, in most cases, an increase of expense. If the return obtained by the improved cultivation more than counterbalances the extra expense incurred, the natives will, in course of time, adopt the suggested improvements. And it is with a view to prove practically the merits of these improvements that the model farms have been established in the centres of the cotton-growing tracts. Many specimens of the produce grown on these farms are exhibited.—Journal of the Society of Arts.

THE MEMORIAL TO LORD MAYO.—The subscribers to the Mayo Memorial Fund have agreed to erect a statue in Sicilian marble, nine feet high, of the late Earl in the costume of the Viceroy of India.

INDIAN APPEALS.—On Thursday last, before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the appeal of Agha Hassan Khan v. Nukhee Beg was decided. This was an appeal from Bengal, and occupied a portion of two days. The principal question was whether a deed, which had been lost during the Indian Mutiny, was simply a deed of mortgage or a deed of settlement in favour of the appellant. Sir J. Colville gave judgment, dismissing the appeal with costs without hearing the respondent's case.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £650,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 20th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £512,800; to Bombay, £102,000; and to Madras, £35,200. The minimum price was fixed as before, at 1s. 10½d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 10½d. will receive about 60 per cent., above that price in full. On Bombay at 1s. 10½d. in full. The average rate on Calcutta was 1s. 10-58d.; on Bombay and Madras, 1s. 10-53d.

THE ZANZIBAR MISSION.—Sir Bartle Frere, G.C.S.I., accompanied by Major Ewan Smith, Mr. Hill, Foreign Office, the Rev. Mr. Badger, Mr. Grey, and other members of his mission, left Charing-cross by the 10.15 train on Thursday morning for Paris. A large number of people assembled at the station to take leave of Sir Bartle Frere, and to wish success to the work which he has undertaken. Sir John Kaye, Political Secretary, India Office, proceeds with the mission to Paris. Her Majesty's ship Enchantress may be expected to reach Brindisi in the course of this week, in readiness to take on Sir Bartle Frere and the rest of his party to Zanzibar.

WILL OF GEN. SIR PATRICK MONTGOMERIE.—The will, with three codicils, of General Sir Patrick Montgomerie, K.C.B., R.A., who died on October 5, at 10, Elvaston-place, South Kensington, was proved on the 25th ult., by the relict, William Henrietta Montgomerie, and Bladen West Black and Sir George Balfour, K.C.B., the executors, under £16,000. The deceased general has left to each of his executors £100, and to his servant, John Bankes, £100, all free of duty; to his widow he leaves a pecuniary legacy of £1,000, his household furniture, and the income of the residue for life; at her death the residue is to go among his brothers and sisters in such manner as she shall appoint.

WILL OF THE LATE SIR GEORGE POLLOCK.—The will, with three codicils, of Field-Marshal Sir George Pollock, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., was proved, on the 12th inst., by Mr. John Henry Pollock (the brother of the deceased), Sir James Alexander, K.C.B., and Dame Henrietta Pollock, the relict and acting executors, the personal property being sworn under £60,000. The testator has left to his widow his two shares in the Hall of Arts and Sciences, South Kensington, and, in addition to the provision made for her by settlement, a life interest in £6,000 and £5,000 guaranteed stock Madras Irrigation and Canal Company; to his son Frederick he gives a legacy of £3,000, the sword and belt presented to him by the Indian Government, his Afghan dagger, the gold medal called the Pollock medal, for Addiscombe, and the red ribbon and badge of the Order of the Bath, and he states that he makes no further provision for him, he being otherwise most amply provided for; to his said son's wife he leaves the mantle of the Order of the Bath; to his son David Henry he leaves the gold box with the freedom presented to him by the city of London, and a legacy of £2,000; to his son Archibald Reid Swiney, he leaves his medals and clasps, his star of the Order of the Bath, set with diamonds, the Woolwich Pollock medal, and a legacy of £6,000, and to his said son's wife the mantle of the Order of the Star of India; to each of his acting executors (except his widow) and to his nephew and niece, John Carwood and Julia Pollock, £100 each, free of duty; to his daughter, Mrs. Key, the interest of £6,000 for life, and at her death two-thirds of such capital is to go to her two sons by a former marriage—viz., George John Harcourt, and Alfred Frederick Pollock Harcourt. There are several other specific bequests, some of which do not take effect until the widow's death, who is to have the use of the household furniture and effects during her life. The testator gives his emblem or baton of a field-marshal to his wife for life, and after her decease to his son Frederick. The residue of his property, real and personal, the testator gives in equal moieties, to or for the benefit of his sons David Henry and Archibald Reid Swiney and their respective wives and children.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA (LIMITED).—An extraordinary general meeting of the shareholders was held on Nov. 20 at the Cannon-street Hotel, "for the purpose of considering a resolution which will be proposed by the directors to the meeting for altering certain of the regulations of the company, and for making new regulations, to the exclusion of, or in addition to, such resolutions, and of adopting such resolution, with or without modification, or otherwise as the meeting may deem fit." The chair was occupied by Mr. R. O. Campbell. The notice calling the meeting was read by Mr. R. O. Sawers, the chief manager. The following summary comprises the alterations:—In future the day of holding the annual general ordinary meeting of the company is fixed for the 22nd day of April, save when that day is a Sunday or public holiday. By this arrangement shareholders abroad will know the exact day on which the ordinary general meeting of the company will be held, and can make arrangements accordingly for being represented thereat. Three calendar months' notice must be given of any extraordinary general meeting, instead of "seven days, at the least, and not more than fourteen days' notice," as at present, and proper notice of such meetings must be given in some newspaper circulating in Calcutta and Bombay. In future, every member shall have one vote for every ten shares, or any less number of shares; and an additional vote for every ten shares beyond the first ten up to 200 shares; and an additional vote for every twenty shares held beyond the first 200 shares up to 400 shares; and an additional vote for every fifty shares held beyond the first 400 shares. Any less number of shares than ten will, of course, have a vote. Under the old clause, each shareholder had one vote for every share up to fifty shares, but no shareholder had more than fifty votes. In future, a proxy will be available for six months, instead of one as at present. The minimum remuneration of the directors is reduced from £3,000 to £2,500. Any member may appoint and cause to be entered in the register some place within the United Kingdom where notices addressed to him may be sent. The power conferred by a power of attorney is, in future, restricted to voting at ordinary general meetings of the company. A clause was also introduced, regulating the mode of winding up the company in the event of such a necessity arising. It may be added that the scope of the proposed alterations is to give to shareholders resident in India and elsewhere increased facilities for exercising a control over the affairs of the company. Some discussion ensued on the different clauses, proposed to be altered, after which resolutions were passed authorising the alterations.

ture platform, when he saw the prisoner enter the first-class waiting-room. After looking round the room, he walked to a box which had been nailed to the back of the door to receive contributions to the funds of the Great Northern Hospital. He broke off the lid of the box with a screwdriver, and put his hand into the box. Witness rushed into the room, and saw him put one hand into the breast-pocket of his coat and the other hand into a side pocket. Witness seized him by the collar, and told him he would be charged with breaking open the contribution box. The prisoner said, "Let me go, and I will give you all the money I have taken." He was taken to the inspector's office and searched, and in his right-hand coat pocket 2s. 11d. was found. An inspector at the railway station corroborated the last witness's evidence, and added that 3s. 6d. remained in the box when the prisoner was taken into custody. Mr. Sampson said the prisoner was the son of persons in independent circumstances. On the evening in question he had been drinking, and had broken open the box for a "lark." In answer to the magistrate, one of the inspectors said the prisoner was perfectly sober at the time. Mr. Mansfield said the felony was not proved, but he should sentence him to be imprisoned under the Vagrant Act for three months, with hard labour, for frequenting a place of public resort for the purpose of committing felony. Later in the day, Mr. Humphreys, of the firm of Humphreys and Morgan, attended and stated that he had been instructed by the prisoner's friends to appear for him, but not in time to reach the court before the case was disposed of. He now begged the magistrate to reconsider his decision. The prisoner was at present studying with a private tutor for the Indian Civil Service. His tutor had given him money only a day before, and would have given him more if he had asked for it. He was therefore under no necessity to steal, and the only explanation of the act he had committed that seemed at all probable was that it was an absurd practical joke. He begged the magistrate to take a lenient view of the case, and to treat it as one of malicious injury to property, which it undoubtedly was. The prisoner's mother was at present in a very delicate state of health, and if she heard that her son had been sent to prison the consequences might be very serious. Mr. Mansfield said it appeared to him that the prisoner had the command of money, and there was a possibility that what Mr. Humphreys had stated with regard to the intention of the prisoner might be the fact, as young men had been known to wrench off door-knockers and do other foolish things, certainly not lucris causa. The prisoner might not have had any felonious intent, and, giving him the benefit of the doubt that existed, he should order him to pay 5s. for the damage done to the box, and a penalty of £5. The money was at once paid, and the prisoner set at liberty.

CHOLERA OUTBREAKS IN INDIA.

The Broad Arrow holds that while we hold India—and let us hope that will for ever be—it will be necessary that a portion of our army should be stationed there, and as respects cholera there is no rule on which it may be guarded against. Experience has shown that the most careful and moderate men have been struck down when the most careless and dissolute have escaped. Indeed, many medical officers have held that the drunkard has a better chance than the sober subject. Be this as it may, it is certain that no one is safe from this most terrible of visitations, and all residents in India incur a certain risk of being attacked. The medical returns, however, throw some light on the subject. Although the habits of a man seem to make little difference, it appears that there is an age at which soldiers possess a comparative immunity. The number of cases of cholera amongst men under the age of twenty is always considerable, but between the ages of twenty and twenty-five the death-rate is lighter. From twenty-five upwards, it increases, until at thirty-five it becomes out of all proportion. Or, to speak more correctly, men over the age of twenty usually enjoy good health for the first five years of their Indian service. Under twenty, the constitution does not appear to be sufficiently strong to resist the ill effects of the climate, but after a continuous residence of five years in an unhealthy climate the strength of the soldier begins to fail. The stock of health which he brought from England to India with him seems to have expended itself—and the chances are that he will succumb to any illness that may attack him. These facts are proved by the medical returns, and on them the votaries of short terms of foreign service have rested much of their case. If, they argue, it can be proved that only five per cent. of men fall sick during the first five years of their service in India, while twenty or thirty per cent. succumb to the effects of the climate during the next five years, it is surely advisable to shorten the duration of the tour of foreign service in the tropics by half its present length. It cannot be advisable, even from a military point of view, to retain men at a station when it is certain that by so doing the death-rate and the sick-list will be quadrupled; and it would surely be wiser, to say nothing of the humanity of the course, to bring them back before they become non-effective abroad. Unluckily, the present system has one advantage in the eyes of the authorities. It is the cheapest arrangement that can be made, and to substitute for it one more expensive, would be a matter of difficulty, if not of impossibility. Nor is there any doubt but that constantly moving troops is expensive; and it is necessary, we admit, that every economy should be exercised that is possible. But the economy of paying inefficient soldiers for work they are incapable of performing is questionable, as is the propriety of sacrificing human life to lighten the army estimates. When a soldier dies in India, the cost of his passage home is of course saved, and this consideration, not admittedly perhaps, but practically, is allowed to weigh, and increases the difficulties of effecting a change of system. To alter the regulations so that a regiment should remain five years instead of ten in India would almost double the charge for transport, and, added to this, the Government would have to bring home perhaps nearly as many men as were sent out, instead of effecting a saving of thirty per cent. in the item. That the change of system will cost something is a great bar to any action being taken, we are aware, but the time will come when the authorities will find themselves forced to move in the matter.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NOTHING BETTER.—With the shortcoming days and foggy atmospheres the human system will certainly be more or less deranged, and notably these invaluable pills exert a greater and more beneficial influence over loss of appetite, dyspepsia, bilious errors, irregularity of the bowels, and nervous disorders, than any other medicine. Their mode of action is thoroughly consonant with reason. They completely purify the blood, relieve both head and stomach of all faulty functions, and expel all oppressive accumulations from the bowels. With the blood purified, and all poisons purged from the system, regularity must prevail throughout the body. Aches and pains must cease; healthful energy must supplant weariness; and the shaky nerves must regain their wholesome tone.

MICROSCOPICAL investigation has proved that the decaying substances which accumulate between the teeth contain animal and vegetable parasites, and that the tooth powders, pastes, and washes in general use have no effect upon these.

Messrs. GABRIEL'S Coralite Tooth Paste, Royal Dentifrice and Odontalgique Elixir (obtainable of every respectable Chemist and Perfumer) completely destroy and remove these animalcules, and also preserve and beautify Teeth.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail, which made an unusually long passage from Brindisi to London, are—from Bombay, November 11; Agra and Madras, November 9; Calcutta, November 8.

BOMBAY was working itself up to the highest pitch of fluster and ecstacy over the coming visit from Lord Northbrook. Rajahs, Nawabs, native gentry, and English officials were flocking into the crowded city, with any number of followers in their train. In spite of his fever the Viceroy on the 4th November was well enough to receive a visit from the Mir of Khairpur at Sakkar, to receive and answer deputations from Sakkar and Shaikarpur, and to give a private audience on board his state-barge to the Khan of Khelat and his numerous Sirdars. The next day his Lordship resumed his voyage to Kotri and Haidarabad, reaching the latter place on the 7th, after a visit to the famous battle-field of Meeanee, about six miles off, near the Fulali branch of the Indus. His arrival at Karachi on the 9th was followed by a levée the same evening. His Lordship's appearance at the ball on the 11th was to be cut short by his departure on the same night for Bombay.

WE are glad to hear that the Viceroy had nearly got over his attack of dengue before his departure from Karachi. It is to be hoped that the excitement of his further progress to Bombay and elsewhere will not do his health any serious harm. On the night of the 21st, when Sindia was to entertain the Viceroy at a grand banquet, the chief streets of Bombay were to be brilliantly lighted up while the Viceroy's party drove round the city.

THE Viceroy has issued a "Resolution" regarding the failure of the Sagar Barracks almost as trenchant as the minute launched by the late Lord Mayo against the engineering blunders at Allahabad. The Sagar barracks, which cost £166,000, have been condemned as untenable by a competent committee, on whose opinion Lord Northbrook's censure has of course been founded. Captain Faber, R.E., who had charge of the works until 1868, is pronounced unfit for the duties entrusted to him. Mr. Crawford Campbell, now Chief Engineer for the Indus Valley Railway, is reduced for twelve months from the first to the second grade of Superintending Engineers. Colonel Pollard, R.E., Chief Engineer of the Central Provinces, is likewise reduced from the second to the third grade of Chief Engineers. Mr. Fitzjames, on the other hand, who seems to have been employed on the barracks in 1869, receives high praise for exposing the faulty construction of the buildings, in spite of the snubbings he underwent from Mr. Armstrong, the Superintending Engineer, for which snubbings Mr. Armstrong is now deservedly rebuked. Several other officers are praised or blamed in their several degrees, and others who have died or retired in the meanwhile escape the censure they would else have received.

THE Bombay Gazette is "able to state, on authority," that Lord Northbrook has stopped the works already begun on the State Railways, in order to "re-open the question of the break of gauge." That, if true, is the best piece of work his Lordship has yet done as Viceroy. It only remains for him to see that the question is really re-opened with an honest desire to elicit the truth.

WE learn that H.M.S. Briton remains at Aden to take Sir Bartle Frere and his party on to Zanzibar.

WE learn by telegraph that Lord Northbrook left Bombay for Puna on the 22nd November. From the latter place his Lordship started on the 26th for a visit to the famous Caves of Ellora, a town in the Dakhan, about thirteen miles north-west of Aurangabad and half that distance from the old Pathan city of Dowlalabad, rebuilt on the site of the old Hindu city of Deoghar, in the fourteenth century, by Mohammad Toghlaq, then King of Delhi. These grand old Buddhist or rather Jain temples hewn out of the neighbouring mountain, appear to have been the handiwork of kings of the Chalukya line, which reigned in Southern India from the middle of the third to the close of the twelve century of our era. They have been fully described by the late Colonel Sykes and criticised by Mr. James Fergusson. Elaborate drawings of them were also taken early in this century by Mr. Wales for Daniell's great work on Indian Architecture. These caves, like those of Ajanta and Karli, consist of an outer porch, a music gallery, an inner gallery over the entrance, a nave and side-aisles divided by massive pillars richly carved, and topped by semicircular roofs. At the further end is a kind of half dome, under which is placed the sacred dagoba, a small edition as it were of the Buddhist "tope" or its later representative, the Burmese pagoda. Windows pierced in the galleries shed "a dim religious light" on the worshipper within.

IGNORANT people in most countries have their own way of accounting for whatever lies beyond the range of their ordinary experiences. The latest example of this kind of superstitious guesswork comes to us from India. It appears that the natives of Simla ascribe the periodical flights of locusts to human agency. These unpleasant insects are kept, they say, in huge dry wells by some ingenious fakir, who lets them loose upon the world for the punishment of ordinary mortals, whenever he happens to be hungry or out of temper, or owes his neighbours a grudge for their neglect of him. The notion is sufficiently absurd; but we, who are invited to believe in spirit-haunted furniture and self-playing accordions, can hardly wonder at the effects produced by many centuries of Brahman self-assertion on the minds of our dark-skinned Aryan and Turanian brethren.

THE arrival of the troopship Crocodile at Bombay is reported by telegram.

WE are sorry to hear through a Madras telegram of November 28, that the Hurkara has been wrecked on the Coromandel Coast near Pondicherry. Heavy rains are reported from Madras.

A SUGGESTIVE telegram from St. Petersburg informs us that "no official confirmation has as yet been given to the report of the occupation of Khiva by Colonel Makasoff, who had been sent to reconnoitre the country." From this it is evident that the previous telegram, which announced the withdrawal of the Russian expedition destined for Khiva, meant something different from what it seemed to mean, and that after all, the news from India regarding the Russian occupation of Khiva was not so very far from the truth. If it pleases the Russians to describe an armed expedition against Khiva as a reconnoitring party, they are welcome to put the matter in that way. But the result will probably show that Colonel Makasoff's reconnoitring party was strong enough to do a good stroke of business in the Russian interests.

WHAT sort of a party Colonel Makasoff really led to Khiva may be gathered from a Berlin telegram of November 29, which appeared in last Saturday's Times. It states that, "of the detachments operating in the Orenburg Steppe, the strongest has not yet returned to Krasnovodsk"—the Russian frontier post nearest Khiva—"nor does it seem to be included in the order recalling the others." We may therefore assume either that there was no intention to recall the "reconnoitring party" before it had done its work, or else that the order for its recall was sent too late. If Russia had a fair cause of quarrel with the Khan of Khiva, why all this verbal beating about the bush? What use was there in making a mystery about the simple process of exacting reparation by force from an obstinate offender? From the curious language of English as well as Russian journals it appears that civilised nations never go to war; they only carry on the work of civilisation by means of reconnoitring parties.

THE same telegram informs us that General Kaufmann, Governor of Russian Turkistan, is likely to be transferred to the Government of Bessarabia. Here, then, is a fresh nut for speculative politicians to crack. Has General Kaufmann overstepped his instructions, or merely played out his part for the present in Central Asia? And, if he goes to Bessarabia, will that indicate the early brewing of fresh mischief on that side of Turkey? Or is Russia hankering after Roumania?

ACCORDING to a still later telegram from Berlin no news of Colonel Makasoff's doings had been received since the 7th October, when he was on his way towards Khiva. The Russian official journal still talks of his march as a mere reconnoissance to discover the old course of the Oxus, but the Moscow Gazette hints that fresh orders from St. Petersburg may have given a warlike turn to a peaceful expedition. To judge from old precedent, that is exactly what has been done. We are also told that the Russian engineers have already made a certain pass on the road to Kashgar fit for the passage of field guns, and that a caravan of 4,000 horses and camels has already gone through this pass to Kashgar. We wonder what Yakub Beg thinks of his new friends.

THE letter from "T." in our last number suggests a new argument in favour of reducing the Salt Tax in Bengal to the rate that prevails in Madras. If the population is now shown to be sixty-six instead of forty millions, it follows that the estimated amount of salt consumed by each person must also be reduced by more than one-third. The difference therefore between the consumption of salt in Bengal and in some of the Native States tells all the more strongly in favour of a lowered duty; for no one eats more salt than he requires, and if the native of Bengal or the Upper Provinces consumes on the average much less salt than the native of Bhurtপুর, it seems impossible to suppose that the former takes enough to keep him in good health. We hope that Lord Northbrook will have the courage to face this question also, and to risk a little temporary loss of revenue, for the sake of doing away with an unfair, unsound, and mischievous distinction between different provinces of the same empire. A low uniform duty of a rupee per maund would soon make up for any immediate loss of revenue by the impulse it would give to the consumption of an article so essential to the support not only of human, but of animal life as well; to say nothing of the saving effected by the abolition of inland customs lines and the consequent check to smuggling.

SOME of the reforms proposed by the committee, whose scheme of legal education has just been laid before the several Inns of Court, may be expected to have a certain interest for native Indian law-students and members of the Indian Civil Service on Furlough. The privilege hitherto enjoyed by these classes, of qualifying for the Bar in two years instead of three, appears to be threatened by the new scheme, which proposes to make all students alike pass through a certain period of training, shortened only for those who carry off high honours in the examinations. Nine terms, or two years and a quarter, is the time prescribed for all students who fail to win a first class in honours. These latter alone will be allowed to dispense with two out of the nine terms. Due provision will be made for those native Indian students who enter one of the Inns of Court before the beginning of next year, but all who may enter after that date would have to come under the new rules. A quarter of a year longer will make no material difference to natives of India, who seem to have somehow profited by a concession meant for the special convenience of Indian Civil Servants, whose leave to England seldom exceeds two years at a time. The latter however may have cause to grumble at the change, unless they are very fortunate, or can get the India Office to help them out of the coming difficulty. Another point which may affect some of those who come from India to study for the Bar is the change proposed in the course of study. The new scheme would do away with the present Readerships in Indian Law, on the ground that all students should receive a good general education in legal science, while Indian students may easily learn in their own country those branches of the subject which specially concern them. According to the Saturday Review, they would even then have an advantage over their English rivals at the Indian Bar; but this we fail to see, unless a Hindu or Mohammedan student has been born with an instinctive knowledge of his national laws or has greater facilities for mastering them than an Englishman who goes out to practise in India.

WE regret to observe the death of a former Governor of Madras, Lord Harris, grandson of the General Harris who won his peerage by the successful storming of Seringapatam in the last year of the last century. The late Lord served his five years as Governor of Madras, from 1854 till after the Mutiny, when he was replaced by Sir Charles Trevelyan. His death appears to have been very sudden.

IT is our sad duty to record the death of Sir Donald Macleod on Thursday last, from the effects of a cruel accident which befel him as he was stepping into a carriage on the Metropolitan Railway. Missing his footing, he fell between the platform and the train which was already moving, and which crushed him so pitifully, that both legs and one arm had to be taken off. The shock to his system at his time of life was more than it could bear, and he died the same night, "calmly, peacefully, and without pain." A paragraph in the papers records the circumstances of his death and outlines his past career. But it would take some pages to do full justice to the blameless statesman who has been thus cruelly cut off in the first years of his hardly earned retreat from a long life of public usefulness. Few Anglo-Indians of the same mark have ever been or deserved to be more widely loved and honoured than the late Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab; and in that province more especially will the news of his cruel death be received with heartfelt sorrow, not only by his own countrymen, but in thousands of native homes where his name has long since become a household word. The son of that fine old soldier, General Duncan Macleod of the Bengal Engineers, Sir Donald entered the Bengal Civil Service in 1828, close behind his father-in-law, Sir R. Montgomery, and a year before his friend, Lord Lawrence. In 1843 he became Collector-Magistrate of Benares, a post which some years afterwards he exchanged for his future field of distinction in the Punjab. In 1854 he rose to be Financial Commissioner under Sir John Lawrence, who found in him an able counsellor and trusty helpmate during the troublous days of the Great Mutiny. His services, none the less important for their unobtrusiveness, in that time of trial, were rewarded in 1860 by a Companionship of the Bath. In 1865 he replaced Sir R. Montgomery as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. For the next five years, until his retirement in 1870, he ruled his great province with statesmanlike mastery and patriarchal mildness, endearing himself to all who were thrown in his way by the sweet courtesy of his bearing, his upright zeal for the common good, and his genuine sympathy with native feelings and ideas. In all classes, from the prince to the peasant, from the turbulent borderer to the industrious merchant, he seems to have inspired a well-grounded trust in his wise yet tender statesmanship, his firm sense of justice tempered with that mercy which redeems justice from reproach, and his readiness to encourage all forms of mental and material growth. The spirit of his rule was worthily reflected in the dealings of his officers with the frontier tribes, in his management of native rulers like him of Kashmir, in the beginnings of a promising trade with Central Asia, in the development of local industries, the steady increase of native schools, and the foundation of a University at Lahore. During his rule the revenues of his province were increased by more than £650,000, the average selling price of land was nearly doubled, and the area of irrigated land was extended by more than one half. In 1866 Sir Donald McLeod was fitly honoured with a Knighthood of the Star of India. His retirement from office in 1870 and his subsequent return home were marked by a display of almost universal regret for the loss of a large-hearted statesman, a true father to his people, a high-souled English gentleman, and a Christian without guile. Unwillingly indeed, for his health's sake, he left a country where his nature had struck its deepest roots. With him has passed away one of whom we might fairly ask with the mourner of Quinctilius—

Incorrupta Fides, Nudaque Veritas
Quando ullum inveniet parem?"

It has been said that poor Sir D. Macleod lost his life from trying to step into a railway carriage in motion. Be that as it may, we should like to know how else, in many cases, it is possible to enter or leave a Metropolitan train. As the trains at many stations on that line stand still for only ten, fifteen, or twenty seconds, a great many passengers must daily risk their lives in the attempt to get into or out of their carriages. To miss your footing is almost certain death for those who cannot at once recover themselves. Nor is the danger from a false step confined to the Underground Railway. It exists more or less on every line that we know of. Either there is a broad gulf between carriage and platform, or the step that bridges it over is much too small for absolute safety. Surely there must be some easy way of averting any risk worse than that of a fall on to the platform. If railway companies would only turn or could be forced to turn their attention to this matter of commonplace precautions, Sir Donald Macleod will not have died in vain.

MILITARY TACTICS IN THE FIELD.

THE publication of Lieutenant Maurice's Prize Essay, which was lately noticed in these columns, has been wisely followed by that of six more essays selected by the umpire, Colonel Hamley, at the Duke of Wellington's request, from among those which were found worthy of special mention.* The writers of these six represent every branch of the English Army, and almost every rank, from the Lieutenant to the General. It is pleasant to find an old Guardsman like General Craufurd, and a Staff Officer of the rank and mark of Colonel Sir Garnet Wolseley contesting for the prize against a cavalry captain and three lieutenants of infantry, artillery, and engineers. If the reading of these essays tends to justify Colonel Hamley's choice of the prize-winner, they also serve to show the general excellence of the competition, and the shrewd interest taken by officers of all ranks and arms in the lessons of late campaigns. In reading them we are carried far away from the old stereotyped ideas of the pipe-clay school of mere sergeant-majors into a new world of intelligent progress and fruitful inquiry. It is clear that the better class of our officers are quite ready to march with the times, and to exchange the shackles of blind use and wont for a discerning allegiance to the manifest teachings of a science old as man himself in its general principles, but liable to endless changes of practical detail.

On one point of the highest importance all these writers are practically at one with Lieutenant Maurice himself. The good old English method of moving infantry forward for a front attack in lines of battalions at close order, elbow to elbow with rear rank well locked up, has proved of eminent service in many a tough fight. But the vast improvement of late years in the fire of rifled guns and small arms, as tested especially in the campaigns of 1866 and 1870, has enforced upon all thoughtful minds the danger of applying the old formation to the changed conditions of modern warfare. Against an enemy well armed, fairly skilled in the use of the improved weapons, and steady enough to take fair aim at the advancing foe, an attack in close order line becomes hardly more practicable than an attack in column. It would answer well enough against any foe in India, or even against the French, who have never been renowned for coolness under fire. But it would probably be hazardous against a Russian army, and it would almost certainly fail against those sturdy disciplined Teutons who so lately conquered France. We are not very likely to come to blows with

Moltke's countrymen; but it is well to be prepared for all emergencies of that sort. "Acting on our present principles"—says Lieutenant King—"and the enemy on those which have proved so successful against tactical formations near akin to ours, we have the history of the continued defeat of the French to prove that our chances of victory would be doubtful. Place us on the same tactical footing as nations who have put their theories to the test of war, and then, should we have to fight, it becomes again a question of fighting power and national courage." What would become, we wonder, of the "thin red-line" of history, advancing at regulation pace over twelve or fifteen hundred yards of ground under a steady fire from rifled fieldpieces and breechloaders of the latest pattern? Not much of it, we fear, would be left for the crowning volley pointed, if needful, by the bayonet-charge. Even at Alma our advancing line broke up by degrees into irregular groups of skirmishers. The same process was carried out at Chattanooga in the last American war, and the Gaisberg at Weissenburg was stormed by infantry advancing in loose order and irregular lines. Looking to these and other "modern instances," Lieutenant Hildyard gives up the old line formation as little less impracticable than the column for attacking purposes. He would retain the line, but open out the files, whose movements would be regulated by those of the skirmishing line in front.

Lieutenant Waller of the Engineers draws the same moral from Prussian practice in the late war. As the Prussians were "taught by experience to attack with clouds of skirmishers supported by lines" in open order, so it behoves us also to modify our tactical system in accordance with their example. The skirmishers, who formerly served as "a thin curtain drawn in front of the attack," and became useless beyond a certain point, are now "part and parcel of the attack itself;" and what was formerly the attacking line has now become "a support whose duty it is to reinforce its skirmishers and hold the ground already gained by them." The skirmishers therefore will henceforth consist of "whole battalions and even brigades;" and the supporting lines should also advance in slightly extended order, say two or three paces between the files. A regiment so formed would be ready either to reinforce or relieve the skirmishers at a moment's notice; it could resist cavalry by throwing its companies into squares, and would be sufficiently in hand to "close in and make a rush for a position."

Captain Russell of the 10th Hussars likewise argues that the line formation is "not adapted for the advance of infantry over a long space of ground," whatever use it may subserve in dealing the final shock. He too lays stress upon the fact that skirmishers, instead of being "a feeble formation," destined to fall back as soon as the real fighting begins, have now become in effect the attacking line, continually strengthened as it moves forward by recruits from the supporting lines and columns in its rear. The leading supports he would move forward in line at open order, "with a power of at any time forming and presenting a line to the enemy;" the second line being dispersed in columns according to the exigencies of the case.

Let us listen next to Sir G. Wolseley speaking on the same subject. For infantry attacking infantry armed with breechloaders, there can, he says, "be only one good formation. The tactics which served our purpose in the days of the old musket are utterly unsuited now for war. . . . The days when successively deployed stiff lines of infantry could advance as we did at the Alma are past. In lines where the touch—to which our old-fashioned drill-masters attached so much importance—is maintained, it is impossible to have either the flexibility or the quickness that is now indispensable, so as to reap the utmost advantage from the gentlest undulation of the ground, and with a view to getting rapidly over it, from one sheltered spot to another, until at last you close with your adversary." He might have added that even at the Alma stiff lines of infantry gradually transformed themselves into skirmishing groups. Like Captain Russell, he proposes to attack with infantry in "a loosely composed line." The confusion that follows from such a mode of attack he too, like Lieutenant Maurice, desires to organise and regulate beforehand in time of peace. "Let us practice that disorder until we have reduced it to order, and have established thereon a system following well-understood rules." It is almost needless to add that, in his opinion also, "the line of skirmishers must in future be the line of attack." Behind the skirmishers he would place two or three lines of supports, in open order, but somewhat less extended than the skirmishers themselves. The old notion of a skirmisher's duties must of course be put entirely out of sight in view of war's new requirements. "There cannot be in future any clearing the front of skirmishers to allow 'the line to advance;' henceforth it will be for the skirmishers themselves to go forward." They must be taught to feel that they will only be reinforced, not relieved; that "their true business is to push on—push on—until they have seized the position." English soldiers, we are sure, will not be slow to realise and act upon the new principles, which have at last forced their way into the conservative atmosphere of the Horse Guards.

Even so old an officer as General Craufurd gives in his allegiance to the new principles so far at least as concerns the attack. He takes care to point out that the system of deployed lines which answered in the Peninsula was really carried out as part of a system of defence. "It was not until after a repulse of the enemy that an attack in a deployed line took place; it was continued only for a short distance, and was carried out under entirely different circumstances to those which would attend the attack of an enemy posted in a strong position, where the advance must be made over a considerable space against troops unbroken by a struggle in the open field, and supported by long-range artillery." It is true, he adds, that deployed lines were used for attack at the Alma, but then at that time there were no rifled guns; and the stiff lines, as we said before, resolved themselves into irregular groups.

We have referred by the way to the new rules issued from the Horse Guards for the movements of infantry under fire. If they seem to halt a little between two opinions, they go so far at least in the right way as to break up the battalion into separate wings, and to range the four companies of each wing into double companies, each of which in war time would be nearly as strong as a single Prussian company. The usefulness of skirmishers is also recognised to a cheering extent. A battalion acting alone will send forward one of its wings in open order; the first double company skirmishing, the other in support, with two paces between each file. In the case of a brigade two half-battalions will go forward in like manner, one to skirmish, the other to support; the rest being drawn up in line of half-battalion double-columns three or four hundred yards behind the supports. It is also provided that the skirmishing line may advance at need by separate ranks a hundred yards or so apart from each other; the rear rank hurrying up at any check to reinforce the front. Each half-battalion is to be commanded by its own major, the lieutenant-colonel taking only "a general charge" of the two wings. This looks like a good beginning of a very desirable reform. For its due development we may trust to time and the pressure of military opinion as brought out in the essays from which we have quoted, and to which we hope presently to recur.

NAKED LAW.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Above all, they revolt from the operation of the law when it results in the dispossession of established landholders to the benefit of grasping usurers; and the actual and very practical consequence is that, while we are only doing what is right, we alienate classes on which our Government should rely for support, and play involuntarily into the hands of those who owe us no thanks whatever.—Article in the Times of the 25th November.

SIR,—The Times is at last drawing attention to the terrible danger we are incurring in India by arming opulent and unscrupulous litigants with irresistible power; the editor admits that our laws are often in rude collision with native feeling, and he believes that in point of fact any experienced Indian official, if asked what the natives looked upon with the greatest apprehension, would point to our Civil Courts.

We, English conquerors, are wrong in supposing that we are doing what is right, when we encourage and assist the conquered, (who are still like children and require guidance) to run into debt. What would we say if Parliament were to pass a law authorising all our young noblemen and squires on attaining the age of 14 years (an English boy of 14 may be compared with a native youth of 18) to sell or give away their ancestral property? The Hindoo law strictly prohibits the alienation of ancestral real property, but we legalise and encourage this alienation in spite of the protests of the landed aristocracy. In my letters on the Rajpoot Clans in your paper of the 10th and 17th October last year I urged the dangers we are incurring by refusing to restrict the power of transferring land. Our statesmen appear to be enamoured with the idea of free trade in land, notwithstanding the entreaties of the landowners themselves, urging that their power to sell or give away or encumber land should be limited in accordance with ancient Hindoo Law.

I beg to suggest that the petition of the great majority of the Hindoo Talookdars of Oudh, prepared through the exertions of Rajah Hunwunt Singh of Ralakhunkur and Dharoopoor, and forwarded to the Government of Oudh in January 1862, should be translated and published for the information of Parliament. It will show how alive the native aristocracy are to the dangers of allowing youthful noblemen to fall into the hands of griping usurers, and through their means to be ground by the inexorable machinery of hard and unsympathetic laws, the operation of which will give birth to formidable political convulsions as soon as a Russian-Tartar Army shall have reached Balkh.—Your obedient servant,

A "PROTECTED STATE."

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—A letter under the above heading appeared in the Times of the 23rd inst., on which I beg your permission to offer a few brief remarks.

The correspondent, apparently an officer of H.M.'s Military Service, says he has not by him a few facts he gathered from members of the agricultural population in 1869, and which he wrote down at the time. He can recollect this much, however, and vouch for its accuracy, that the crop of the zamindar (cultivator) is divided into three parts, two parts of which are claimed by the Maharaja, while the remaining part goes to reward the toil of the unhappy owner.

I am prepared to admit the general accuracy of the above, but not the correctness of the conclusions drawn by your correspondent.

I have before me a booklet, written in 1858 (since which year, the first of the Maharaja's rule, great improvements have taken place in his administration, both fiscal and judicial), by one who appears to have had no special leaning towards the Maharaja, entitled—"The Land We May Not Live In." This traveller skirted, at his leisure, the boundary of the British and Jumoo territories from near the left bank of the Jhelum to the right bank of the Ravee, and says:—"I made special enquiries of some dozens of villagers, at various points and quite independent of each other, as to their opinion of the money and kind (butaee) payment respectively in force in the British and Jumoo territories. The boundaries of which are unmistakably defined here, as I suppose elsewhere, by masonry pillars. . . . The general testimony concurred, without an exception, in supporting the payment of revenue in kind, the villagers on our side declaring, notwithstanding the recent reduction in their rent, that they would willingly return to the old regime, and those in the Maharaja's possessions professing satisfaction with existing arrangements, except as to the amount taken, nominating one-half, but really close upon two thirds, including the exactions of local officers, with whom rests the allotment of the respective quantities, after a cursory appraisalment of the yield of each field. The main fact on which they rested their arguments was that, let the season be good, or let it be bad, the British subject had to pay the same amount in money, while the Maharaja's tenant could only be assessed on what he actually grew, season by season.

The above, from the notes of an evidently careful enquirer, will show that while there may be some little filching on the part of the local officers, there is no complaint against the system.

The Times correspondent probably does not know that this same system prevails, to this day, or till very lately, in the British province of Sind, and that is the one by which most native States raise their land revenue. Why single out the Maharaja of Kashmere as the one oppressor in this respect?

The correspondent says it is also a fact that a Kashmiri is afraid to appear clean and decently dressed, for fear that such an "appearance of prosperity" should cause him to be fined, and he can positively affirm that the chief baker of Serinagar, who supplies the "sahib log" with bread, "gave this as his reason to a friend of mine, when reproached for his shockingly dirty appearance."

I am surprised that any one bringing the serious charge of oppression against a ruler of the Maharaja's standing should adduce such an utterly unreliable hearsay instance as the above, in support of grave allegations, and rest these on the hap-hazard assertion of one Kashmeeree baker, who, no doubt, knew the exact measure of his customer's foot, and spoke accordingly, dirt and lying being the normal attributes of the Kashmeeree artisan at Sreenuggur, at Noorpoor, at Umritsur, or Loodeeana.

Did the Times correspondent see the political prisoner at Kargil, and how does he know he had been in confinement for eleven years?

Nothing is more common than for visitors to Kashmere to make assertions affecting the government of the Maharaja, which they would find it difficult to prove. It is the fashion.

ENGLAND'S SLAVERY.—No. 1.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—The Times of the 29th ult. contained a thrilling and horrifying account of the inhuman atrocities of the slave trade, as carried on from the coast of America to the different ports and cities of Nejd, the Persian Gulf, and Turkish Arabia, to permeate still further through these provinces into Asia Minor, Persia, and even Turkey in Europe, as well as our own territories of India, that bright jewel in the British crown; and though the bondage in the latter may be known and called by another name, as in many other cases also, it is still the same inhuman traffic and crime; that human creatures are bought, sold or exchanged as articles of merchandise, that cannot alter its heinousness, and the culpability of those who sanction it; and we have in the noble mission undertaken by Sir Bartle Frere and his staff but a continuance of that generous and humane spirit and effort that animated the souls of different statesmen in the last century.

I find that slavery or bondmen first commenced in 1491 B.C. according to Usher, and 1618 B.C. according to Hales, thus, "Both thy bondmen and bondmaids which you shall have shall be of the heathen that are round about you, and of them shall ye buy bondmen and bondmaids."

Has the evil abated since those days in the eastern, or even in the western portion of our hemisphere? Let this be our present duty to enquire, and how far territories that exist under the regal rays of the British dominion are free from this evil, that we are in the present day so nobly trying to put under our feet at Zanzibar, when the very same laudable efforts might be employed, to, first "pull out the mote that is in our own eye, before we attempt to pull out the mote that is in our (African) brother's eye."

Over a hundred years had elapsed of our conquest of India before the Government abolished the religious and sacred rite of Suttee, and it was much feared that trouble and dissension would ensue from the promulgation of such an edict; but it was effected without riot or bloodshed, and this barbarous human sacrifice has passed away for ever from amongst the ancient and idolatrous rites of the Hindoos.

The writer some years ago rode many miles in the interior of India from his camp (in the Madras Presidency) to witness the sheddel feast, another idolatrous practice, the victims being chiefly selected from the dobie or washerman caste (Hindoos). The machine itself consisted of an upright pole from twenty to twenty-five feet high, across which a long pole was balanced at the top, and weighted at one end with stones, and with several ropes for hauling attached; the foolish and misguided devotee or victim was brought out of the temple, either drugged or in great agony, crying, "Gointha, Gointha!" the name of his god, and writhing from the excruciating pain of a large steel hook, passed through the muscles of his back, a little below the shoulder blades; the hook was then fixed to a rope at the end of the pole, and when all was ready the swinging round commenced; dancing girls screamed their utmost, tom toms were beaten, and the people yelled with delight until the victim had passed through the ordeal and fulfilled his vow, and the general excitement and enjoyment of the fair commenced. Slavery to idolatry I think I must call this.

Now, this is a feast founded by the Brahmins, and is not, I believe, confined to this particular caste of dobies, though it would appear that they are more susceptible to the powers of Brahmanism than any other. A verse from the Ramayana will illustrate the powerful effect of their will over a highly superstitious and idolatrous people:—

Even he who cannot be slain by the prodigious arms of India, nor by those of Kali, nor by the terrible Chackrum of Vishnu, shall be destroyed if a Bramin curse him, as if he were consumed by fire.—Let not the King, though in the greatest distress for money, provoke Bramins to anger by taking their property, for once enraged they could immediately, by sacrifices and imprecations, destroy him with his troops of elephants, horses, war-cars, &c., &c.

This was only another type of slavery or bondage through fear.

Referring to my journal I find that I visited the slave market in Cairo in 1854 (now eighteen years ago). A large square building, with no opening except an archway, through which was passing an Arab slave merchant, and a Turkish lady, the latter seated aside a small but active donkey, staring through her yasmak, and no doubt wondering what the infidel Nazarine wanted in such a place, as most probably she was going to inspect the human cattle there for sale. The archway led to an open court about eighty feet square, surrounded by openings or cells into the court-yard. A slave, a piece of sacking, or woollen amply and a few water-jars were all that could be seen in each. The slaves themselves were young, and chiefly Nubians; freedom seemed unknown to them, and they were sullen, sorrowful, abject, and typically low in nature, as compared with other races; they were quite naked, with the exception of a narrow piece of cloth or rag round the loins, the hair was unkempt, bushy and dirty, and in many cases plaited in minute strings, and besmeared with white fat, and nearly all were tattooed and scored. No charge was made for the entrée into this human menagerie, but the air resounded with the cry of Bak-sheesh, Bak-sheesh; and I witnessed afterwards some of the cruelties exercised upon these poor wretches by their Egyptian taskmasters, in proceeding down the Mahmoudieh Canal.

So much for slavery in Egypt.

Now, law, order, and civilisation have effectually checked if not altogether eradicated another evil in India, viz., Thuggism, that most horrid of crimes, strangulation, of which our modern art of garrotting is a type, though the former was reduced by its constant practice, dexterity and adroitness to a workman-like perfection of skill, the Thug being trained from an infant, while the practice of our English Thug is a clumsy, degraded, brutal force, possessing nothing but the violent depraved characteristics of the accomplished ruffian.

Many of the dangerous tribes of Thugs, of Pindarees, Dacoits, and others have in some cases been extirpated, while many others have been brought under the nurturing hand of authority and civilisation, in the worthy industrial establishment at Jubblepore.

The only crime against God and man that has not been scotched and killed in India is slavery, and it is here clear that we have not swept and garnished our own threshold of civilisation in our own territories, but must needs fly to Africa for a slave question, when we have it in our own boasted possessions to deal with, though not of that horrifying type with all its attendant cruelties. It really becomes strange how often we look afar off, or outside the mark, for subjects of philanthropy, when under the very observation of our Indian Government, are cases of slavery and eunuchating, and though the Penal Code provides in its clauses heavy penalties for such crimes, still it is carried on, and chiefly in the following manner:—

The slaves and eunuchs are chiefly smuggled from Africa and Arabia through the instrumentality of the subtle and crafty agents of the few Mahomedan princes who visit the several sacred shrines in the capacity of Hadjis (or pilgrims), and return with their purchased slaves as part of their retinue, without check or hindrance.

Now, Hindoo princes do not require the services of Mussulman slaves or eunuchs, as the latter have often only special duties to perform, in the guardianship of the harem, or to act as confidential servants in performances not often of a respectable or reputable character, but bearing a strong resemblance to the heaviest crimes.

There are, however, one or two exceptions to this rule in their not being treated as slaves (but more like the Saxon vassalage of our own country in former days), acting only as ordinary native servants, and tied only to perpetual service by obligations of some kind or another, only understood between themselves and their masters.

Those existing under such circumstances form exceptions in this way; that at the fall of Delhi and Lucknow many of these classes escaped, and flying for other sources of employment, found it in this phase of free service I have just named.

If I am informed rightly, eunuchs have only two noble and princely houses in India who entertain their services; viz., the ex-King of Oudh, and the Nawab Nazim of Moorshedabad, the latter, I believe, being in this country to press forward his claim for an increase to his pension, not a decrease of eunuchs and their et ceteras.

It is fully believed by many of the more advanced natives of India, that if the Government were to call for a return from the majority of the other Mahomedan and other princes in India of the number of slaves in their service, or owned by them, that none would be found to possess any of these eunuchs or bondmen.

But again I would ask—Why should these two families be permitted to retain this symbol of barbaric ages, and of inhumanity on the one hand, while with the other they are grasping the hand of civilisation, and pretending to receive and encourage (not by their own example) those humane principles it has ever been the effort of our Government to instil, and proving most fully by its policy, conduct and action, its earnest and sincere condemnation of slavery in all its phases, from the days of Wilberforce and others, down to the present noble mission just undertaken by Sir H. Bartle Frere?—I am, Sir, yours obediently,

THALMA.

STATE RAILWAYS.

The Bombay Gazette points out that Mr. Molesworth estimates the several lines as under:—

Names.	Miles.	Cost per Mile.
1. Punjab Northern Railway	280	£6,400*
2. Indus Valley Railway—
Mooltan to Rhoree	271	6,300
Rhoree to Kotree	222	6,000*
3. Rajpootana (Agra Division)	185	5,500†
4. Holkar	86½	11,000
5. Neemuch	306	5,000

But two of these estimates are open to revision:—(1) the Punjab Northern Railway should show £17,857 per mile instead of £6,400, for the cost of bridges and flood openings must be included to arrive at a correct average per mile (we have taken the amount as estimated by the Rawul Pindee Committee); and (2) the Rhoree and Kotree section of the Indus Valley Railway, where bridges are again excluded, one of which (the bridge over the Indus) the Consulting Engineer characterises as "a formidable undertaking." The advocates of the 5 ft. 6 in. gauge will find that this report strengthens their opinion that both for economy and efficiency that gauge is far superior to the metre (3 ft. 3½ in.) gauge adopted by Government. We see from Mr. Juland Danvers's (the Government Director of Indian Guaranteed Railways) report that the Wudwan branch of the Bombay and Baroda Railway has been constructed at a cost of less than £5,500 per mile, and that the contract for the Patree State Railway has been let at a considerably lower sum. Now these are 5 ft. 6 in. in gauge; and we ask, what is there in the State Railway rates shown above that warrants the assertion that narrow gauge railways are so much cheaper to construct than broad? We see nothing whatever, for although the cost of the Agra division of the Rajpootana line is no more than the Wudwan line, and is estimated to cover stock, still we fail to see that there is such a considerable saving as to warrant our making no other than narrow gauge railways in the future, especially when it appears that the cost of the Punjab Northern Railway is higher than the cost (to 31st December, 1871) of any of the so-called extravagant broad gauge railways except two, viz., the East Indian, which cost £19,491 per mile, and the Bombay and Baroda Railway, which cost £18,731 per mile—the average for the whole Indian railway system at that time being considerably less than the estimated cost per mile of the Punjab Northern Railway, showing only £15,902 per mile. The figures for the East Indian and the Bombay and Baroda, however, include rolling stock, the expenditure on which account is not now before us; but we have little hesitation in saying that, were the cost of rolling stock deducted, the mileage cost of these two lines would be much less than that of the Punjab Northern. If the estimates in this latter case are right, we have here the very strongest case against narrow gauge that can be adduced, especially as we know that several large railway contractors at home have offered to construct the same line on the broad gauge, and maintain it for one year, for a smaller sum per mile than the Government estimate, offers which for some unknown reason were declined. Mr. Molesworth himself is not a rabid narrow gauge advocate, and points out some of the evils of break of gauge; but we will defer any remarks on this point for a future occasion.

* Exclusive of large bridges and flood openings.

ANGLO-INDIAN WIVES.

The Madras Times holds that Anglo Indian wives are very much like other wives of the British race; but it may very well be that climate has some effect upon their character and conduct. The physical effect is obvious enough, and we have no right to be censorious on that score. Some constitutions are necessarily debilitated by residence in a tropical climate, and no doubt many men have the pain of seeing their wives becoming languid and querulous, and themselves become beacons of warning to the unmarried; but that can hardly be set down as the fault of the wife altogether. The fortune that brought her to a climate unsuited to her constitution is primarily to blame. No doubt the habits that arise out of our exotic mode of life here tends to bring out into strong relief the selfishness of wives where it does exist. The English wife, as a rule, has no strong temptation to live in a different climate from her husband, and yet we have known English husbands called upon to make very heavy sacrifices in order that wife and children might have a long season at the sea-side. But in India climate is the first of all considerations, and the Anglo-Indian wife has temptations that her sisters at home have no idea of to desert her husband for a stay on the Hills or a run Home. Perhaps these wives yield too easily to the temptation. Some do, and some do not; and if we had any means of balancing the two parties numerically, we fancy the results would not be so damaging to the self-sacrificing character of the Anglo-Indian wives as pessimist observers suppose. Very often the flight to the Hills or Home is suggested and insisted on by the husband, who cannot bear to see the cheek of his darling grow pale, while he knows a way of giving it back its roses; and while the gay grass widow who leaves her husband with a light heart becomes a prominent character on board a P. and O. steamer, the banished wife who feels her banishment to be a misfortune, naturally keeps with her full heart in the back ground. Thus, it has come to be a popular impression that Anglo-Indian wives going home are a light-hearted lot who rather love to enjoy the fugitive pleasures of the road than bother themselves with sentimental regrets; those who think so forgetting that women of another sort do not carry their hearts on their sleeves for fellow travellers to peck at. If any comparison between Anglo-Indian wives and English wives can be made, apparently unfavourable to the former, we think the fact ought to be credited to the circumstances in which they live, rather than to any deterioration of Englishwomen in India. The wife who by choice lives six months of the year on the Hills, leaving her husband to grill in loneliness on the plains, is not the beau ideal of an unselfish wife; but we do not know that she is one whit more selfish than she would be in England, where she would not think of more than an extra month beyond her husband's holiday at the seaside. The circumstances are altogether different. By living on the hills during the hot season she escapes, or believes she escapes, certain detriment to her health, as well as the disagreeables from which her duty-bound husband cannot escape. On the other hand, the wife who voluntarily shares the horrors of the hot season with her husband, rather than leave him lonely, performs an act of self-sacrifice that she could not have performed at home. This ought certainly to be noted on the credit side of the Anglo-Indian wife's account; and yet hardly any mention is ever made of it. The truth is, that the life of Anglo-Indians is essentially an unsatisfactory one, full of unnatural circumstances that bring out the extremes of human character; and while we think selfish women show their selfishness more in this country than in England, women of another sort in the same manner become more self-sacrificing under the necessities of life in this country.

MUTINY ACT.—The C. in C. is pleased to notify, for the information and guidance of all concerned, that the Mutiny Act and Articles of War for 1872 will be promulgated and brought into force on Nov. 1, 1872.

THE VICEREGAL PROGRESS.

THE VICEROY AT SAKKAR.

SAKKAR, Nov. 3.—I informed you yesterday by telegram that Lord Northbrook was suffering from dengue (which has fairly established itself here), and that the overland journey from Kusmore to Sakkar had consequently been abandoned. It was first arranged that the Viceroyal party should arrive at Kusmore (80 miles from Jacobabad) on the 1st and ride on to Toje (about half-way), where they were to dine and sleep, going on to Jacobabad on the morning of the 2nd. They were to remain there till the morning of the 4th, when the journey was to be continued to Shikarpore (25 miles), Sakkar (23 miles more) being reached on the morning of the 5th. His Excellency was to have started for Kurrachee on the 6th, and I believe is still to do so, the future programme not being affected by his Lordship's unfortunate attack.

Great preparations had of course been made by the residents of Jacobabad and Shikarpore to give Lord Northbrook a fitting reception, and they are naturally disappointed at the change of route; but there are two sides to most questions, and I think all parties may congratulate themselves that the land journey had to be given up. In the present state of the roads (so shortly after the inundation) it would have been most fatiguing; and even if his Lordship had accomplished it without mishap, the recollections of Sind which he would have carried away with him would have been far less agreeable than those which it is to be hoped he entertains at present. To resume: His Excellency came on by river and arrived at Sakkar yesterday afternoon, before the preparations for his reception were half completed. The Superintendent of Police and thirty mounted policemen arrived from Shikarpore in the course of the evening, and the Collector followed early this morning. His Excellency did not land yesterday, but sufficiently recovered this morning to take a considerable walk along the river's bank (as far as the regulating bridge at the mouth of the new Sakkar canal) returning in a common boat and visiting the Fakir's island on his way. He must be rather fond of sketching, for I am told he amused himself for a full quarter of an hour in sketching the opposite shore of Rohree.

The Khan of Khelat, with a thousand followers, arrived at Shikarpore this morning, and is expected here to-morrow.

Great preparations for an illumination and grand display of fireworks on the fifth are in progress.

Nov. 4.—In my letter of yesterday I told you that the Viceroy was to leave Sakkar for Kurrachee on the 6th. The plan has now been changed, I hear, and he is to go on to-morrow afternoon. Consequently the fireworks and illumination will take place to-night.

This morning early his Excellency walked to the minaret, whence he had a bird's-eye view of Sakkar.

After remaining there some time he walked through a great part of the native town and so back to his steamer. One of the ferry steamers was in readiness to take him for a cruise on his return, but it was getting late, so he went straight on board his own barge, which he has continued to occupy up to the present time.

The Khan of Khelat arrived this morning with about 1,000 followers, and encamped on the maidan. He is to visit the Viceroy at 4 P.M.

At 11 A.M. Meer Ali Moorad crossed the river in one of the ferry steamers which the collector had taken over to fetch him. His carriage was waiting at the Bunder and conveyed him to the Viceroy's barge, which was anchored (to the Bunder) a few hundred yards down the stream. He retired after a visit of a few minutes, and then his Lordship held a levee, at which all the gentlemen of the station were presented. His Excellency afterwards received some of the Meers, and finally the Municipal Commissioners of the town of Sakkar. The young Earl of Donoghmore (who is the Viceroy's guest) arrived this morning in a steam-tug which had been left to bring him on. He was anxious to shoot a tiger (which he succeeded in bagging) somewhere in the Bhawalpore territory, and remained behind him for the purpose.

The Viceroy seems to have got over his dengue, but several of his party are suffering from it, as well as many of the residents of Sakkar. —Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

STATION TALK.

ON THE BANKS OF THE GANGES. Oct. 26.—Early morning, and so cold! There is a grey winter look about the sky, too, which, together with the hoar-frost on the ground, would of themselves be quite enough to make one shiver. Every now and then a wedge of mallard comes bustling down the river, flying as if for dear life, and all the cold-weather flowers and plants have arrived. The latter keep incessantly sweeping up and down round and round in little silver clouds, now darting down and just skimming the surface of the water, again suddenly mounting with rapid movement of the wing, and wheeling high above, dark against the sky. It is, however, still a little early for wild fowl shooting, as the jheels are covered with the cingara, which the natives cultivate most assiduously for the sake of its nut, and will on no account bear of any one disturbing until it has yielded its harvest. Still sportsmen are going out in all directions, mainly for the snipe, which have now abundantly arrived; and shikarries are beginning to come round the station with strings of game fastened to rusty old guns, which one would almost rather stand before than behind. The standing bajra crops still prevent hunting, but they will be off the ground in a week or two more, and the hounds will then go out twice a week; and the cold season, with all its pleasant accessories, may be said to have arrived. Have you seen the last number of the Chameleon? It is the best of all, I think; and as it is the first of a new series, we may certainly expect a great deal of it now. But I am sorry to see in the Editor's preface "that unless the support it receives within the next three months is encouraging, the present number will be the last." It will be a thousand pities if this is the case. We have no magazine of light literature in India, and although Mr. Phil. Robinson has not been the first to attempt supplying the want, he has made by far the highest bid for the public support. This October number contains some pieces that would do credit to the best London magazine. It opens with a sparkling account of Michaelmas by the pen of its founder; then the lyre is swept by two fairly skilful poetical dilettantes. They are followed by (I conjecture) Mr. Phil. Robinson again in a fantastic humour, depicting the creations of delirium. I next turn to a poetical edition of the old German legend, Tannhauser, which is neither so naughty nor so brilliant as the Swinburne's version. This is succeeded by a most lugubrious though well-sustained story, entitled "The Only Woman." A pretty translation from Heine follows, and then a charming essay on Indian railway travelling. The next two pages are occupied by verses, succeeded by Mr. Lepel Griffin's comedy, "A Common Complaint." This little play is sparkling, and has already been put successfully on the boards at Simla. Its leading idea is the absurdity of so-called "women's rights." "A Plea for Hymen" is a sensible reply to Mr. John Steady's letter in the Indian Observer. I should recommend all young men with good incomes and tempers, and still unmarried, to read it. It exposes the ridiculous opinions which some people have regarding "the slavery of wifedom;" a "slavery" which only exists in the distorted imaginations of maiden ladies and ridiculous old bachelors. A paper on Indian rural administration, and three acrostics, complete the number, which I lay down with the unhesitating verdict, "good." The Oudh and Rohilkund Railway is to be opened to day from Allypore to Moradabad. Our friends on the other side of the Ganges will now be brought within the pale of civilisation. In about another year, I am told, the line from Lucknow to Benares will be complete. The prettiest of Indian stations will then be very accessible; and even Nynce Tal will only be a day's journey from the main line of railway. The Lieutenant-Governor descends from Olympus next week; and together with a large and pleasant party of friends and relations, officially known as secretaries and aides-de-camp, goes on a great shooting and pic-nic trip (spoken of in gazettes as a tour) round his dominions. He will not arrive in Allahabad until late in spring.

NAGPORE, Oct. 26.—I am sorry to inform you that the dengue has at last made its appearance in Nagpore. It would indeed be a great pity if it spreads just now, as it would no doubt interfere very materially with the completion of the several works in progress for the reception of the Governor-General. It is said that an opinion was entertained by some, who were reported to be good judges in such matters, that the climate of Nagpore was antagonistic to the dengue, and hence it would never appear here. But really we know not on what grounds such an opinion could have been based, for Nagpore is quite notorious for being the hotbed of nearly all diseases known under the sun, especially fevers, and it would indeed have been a matter of great surprise if dengue, which has appeared in the stations remarkable for their immunity from some diseases, should not have paid us a visit. The Nagpore Volunteer Rifle Corps commenced their annual course of parade, &c., on the morning of the 22nd inst., and we have no doubt they will put in a good appearance on the arrival of the Viceroy. The new Colonel-in-Chief, Mr. J. H. Morris, was on the ground, accompanied by Colonel Doria, of the 20th M.N.I. the Officer Commanding the station of Seetabuldee. The Rev. Mr. Cooper, of the Free Church Mission, is expected at Nagpore in the early part of November. The Rev. Mr. Whitton has been for many months past in sole charge of this mission, the manifold and laborious duties of which, we are informed, he has conducted single-handed in a most praiseworthy manner. Mr. J. F. Muir, having returned from leave, is appointed to officiate as personal assistant to the Chief Commissioner, and Mr. Lindsay Neill will continue as officiating Assistant Secretary. You will soon have our worthy Commissioner, Mr. Pedder, as Municipal Commissioner of Bombay, among you. His departure from here is much regretted. But our loss will be your gain, as well as his, so that we must not regret the same. Mr. Pedder, however, will not leave Nagpore until after the departure of the Governor-General. Mr. Jones, it is said, will succeed Mr. Pedder here. I am sorry to inform you that the master turner of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, a man named Deichman, met with a most serious accident while out shooting the other day between Boree and Sindree. It appears his gun was loaded, and he had his right hand resting on the muzzle, when by some unaccountable means the gun went off, shattering his right hand and wrist, the bullet grazing his forehead and escaping through the rim of his hat. He was at once brought into Nagpore and taken to the Civil Dispensary, where the injured arm was amputated a little below the elbow. He is now, I am told, doing as well as can be expected. Our Chief Commissioner, it is said, will shortly proceed to Bombay to be present at the Council to be held there, after which he will accompany the Governor-General to Nagpore. Mr. Ricketts, the Deputy Commissioner, Nagpore, will return from leave about the 1st proximo, when Captain Thomas, the present Officiating Deputy Commissioner, will go to Wurdah to act there till Major Newmarch joins from Raepore. Mr. Fisher, the Deputy Commissioner, Wurdah, having been sent to Raepore to relieve Major Newmarch. A cricket match was played on the 26th instant between the boys of Bishop's school and the men of the European detachment on the hill, when the former, it is reported, came off with flying colours.—Times of India Correspondent.

THE CAMP OF EXERCISE.—A correspondent of the Pioneer says that it is much to be regretted that Government have chosen a time for the Camp of Exercise when the heaviest rains are known to prevail, and thinks it will be a miserable beginning for our sickly and half-recovered regiments to have to spend, as is inevitable, at least the first fortnight in soaking rain and in camp.

A NICE QUESTION.—An application has been made to the War Office to deduct some of the monthly pay of a medical officer of the 10th Foot in satisfaction of a claim of the Mussoorie Savings Bank. The War Office applied to the Secretary of State for India, asking whether deductions were made in his Grace's department from public officers on similar grounds. The reply was in the negative.

MILITARY PAY CODE.—At length the preparation of a military pay code for all India is to be seriously taken up and completed in twelve months. Colonel C. C. Johnson, recently returned from leave to Europe, has been attached to the account branch of the Military Department in furtherance of this purpose, and proceeds immediately to take up the work.—Civil and Military Gazette.

STREET TRAMWAYS AT CALCUTTA.—We see that the above works are being rapidly pushed on. The lines have been laid along Baityakhana, Bow Bazaar, and the greater portion of Lal Bazaar, and in a few days will connect Seetaldah with the Custom-house. The lines are laid alongside the footpaths at the southern sides of the above streets.—Englishman, Oct. 28.

A DOUBTFUL CUSTOMER.—At Mooltan, during the visit of the Viceroy, a suspicious looking native was seized by the police while attempting to get near his Excellency's carriage. He was found to be a Pathan with a petition about some trifling matter or other which he wished to lay before the Viceroy. He was carefully examined for weapons, but nothing worse than a strong flavour of garlic was found about him.

THE VOLUNTEERS.—Recommending the appointment of an Inspector-General of Volunteers, the Englishman holds that it would be a measure of true economy, ensuring that the money now paid by the country for the support of the movement should be judiciously laid out, and securing a compact valuable organisation instead of isolated bodies of armed men, in some places good, in others little better than a rabble.

ROBBERY ON RAILWAYS.—A new system of robbery has, we are told by the Jubbulpore paper, been introduced on the East Indian Railway in abstracting bags and small parcels from the wire netting over the head of the travellers. A passenger was lately robbed of a courier-bag containing notes and cash, to the value of Rs. 1,000, between Mogul Serai and Dinapore, and another similar case had been reported to the police at Dinapore during the week.

AGRA.—We understand that Miss Moore, the excellent Lady-Superintendent of the Canning Protestant Girls' School in this station, is resigning her post after several years of devoted work, and that a lady has recently arrived from England who will take her place. The school is really well conducted, and we hope that the good name which Miss Moore has gained for it will continue.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 28.

FOREST DEPARTMENT.—From the report on the Forest Administration of the Central Provinces during the year 1871-72 we see that the net revenue realised was Rs. 2,16,118 as compared with Rs. 3,48,687 in the previous year. As, however, the latter sum included realisations of outstanding balances to the extent of Rs. 1,64,455, the net revenue of 1871-72 exceeded that properly due to 1870-71 by Rs. 23,724. Further, nearly Rs. 15,000 of the expenditure debited to 1871-72 was really on account of the preceding year.

HOUSES IN CANTONMENTS.—We (Englishman) suppose that the numerous cases of disputes about lands and houses in cantonments has led to the publication of an order that all applicants for such lands are to sign the following declaration:—"I fully understand the terms on which the occupation of the ground herein described is permitted, and I hereby engage to comply with them without demur, and not to transfer the property to any other person except under the regulations in force at the time for the tenure of land and property in cantonments."

FATAL ACCIDENT TO A SOLDIER.—The Regimental Gazetteer of the 21st Hussars at Lucknow records an accident, by which one of the men of the regiment lost his life. A party of soldiers were out shooting, and two of them raised their guns to fire at some wild ducks passing overhead, but thinking them out of range they lowered their pieces without firing, when one of the guns went off, the charge lodging in the hip of Private Murphy, who was standing only a yard or two off. The poor fellow died soon afterwards.

CIVIL.—The Hon. the President in Council directs that the following be added at Section 8, Supplement A, of the Civil Pension Code:—"After thirty-five years' service, counting from the date of his arrival in India, no officer shall be appointed to any new office, nor be permitted to retain an office which he has held for a period of five years and upwards, except in special cases, which are to be referred for the decision of the Secretary of State. The term 'office' includes officiating appointments."

MILITARY.—The following paragraphs of a military letter from the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for India, No. 180, dated the 13th September, 1872, are published for general information:—"Officers who may be ordered to return to duty for the purpose of proceeding on field service, may, if they can be spared, be allowed to avail themselves of the balance of their furlough without completing a residence of three years in India from date of last return to duty. The period of the voyage to India when ordered out, and the voyage home when taking the balance of furlough, will be considered as service for pension."

A GROAN FROM CALCUTTA.—Judged from its own public writers, Calcutta just at present seems hardly worth living in. A day or two ago the Englishman printed an article half a column long, bewailing the existing deadness of all things there, and elucidating the difficult art of making bricks without straw. A brief summary of our contemporary's plaintive story may be interesting to readers in Bombay, more especially because, as we are all engaged in preparing for the forthcoming splendours, it is pleasant to drop a tear of pity for those who are not blessed in quite so large a measure with exciting subjects to talk about. Well, then, in Calcutta there are "no games of cricket, no rowings, no racings, no nothing." "There are no social gatherings; one half of Calcutta is away and the other half wants to be." Government House is empty, and the stately halls of Belvedere are deserted. The local Council is silent, the High Court makes no sign. The Opera House is to let, the Theatre Royal is neglected, and balls and concerts are never so much as mentioned. A proposed fancy fair is the only thing which disturbs Calcutta's sweet serenity, and that, urges our contemporary, can hardly be considered in the light of an "amusement." In short, from Dan to Beersheba, all this sounds delicious to us who are on the verge of unexampled gaieties, and who expect in one short week to be wholly submerged in a whirlpool of excitement.

Madras.

THE MADRAS ORDINANCE DEPARTMENTS.—We are glad to hear that the local Government and the Commander-in-Chief have lost no time in endeavouring to upset the nice little arrangement by which Madras would lose her efficient manufacturing departments, and be reduced to a "second-rate power." A telegram has, we believe, already been despatched by the Government to the Secretary of State, begging that no final decision may be arrived at on the proposal from Bengal before the Government has had an opportunity of expressing its views. This telegram will no doubt be followed up by a despatch explaining in detail the objections to the Bengal scheme. The public protests from the mercantile and trading bodies should accompany this despatch.—Madras Mail.

THE BRIG "PUNCH."—The Master Attendant of Madras has reported to Government that the brig Punch of Negapatam, which sailed from this port for Colombo on the 1st May last at about 11.30 A.M. has never since been heard of. The Punch was of 158½ tons burthen, was well-found and manned when she went to sea, and she stood well up under her canvas as long as she was in sight. There is no doubt she must either have foundered during the night of the 1st May, or have been driven on shore to the southward, and gone to pieces, with the loss of her crew, numbering in all one East Indian Master (a native of Penang) and thirteen lascars. This was the only vessel which went to sea on the 1st of May.—Madras Athenæum.

A "BEAT" FOR THE AMUSEMENT OF LADY HOBART.—On Tuesday last, Major Hankin, Captain Murray, and Mr. Grigg, assisted by Colonel Hadfield, organised a beat for the gratification of Lady Hobart. The place selected was away by Pykara, at a place known as the "Bamboo Sholah." A numerous party attended and a most enjoyable day was, we are given to understand, the result. No very great slaughter of animals was effected,—a single jungle sheep (mis-called a sheep, for it is a deer) bagged and a sambar wounded, but which escaped. There were, however, four or five sambar seen, and several jungle-sheep; and as the day was a most gloriously beautiful one, and the scenery magnificent, we can well understand that Lady Hobart and the ladies who accompanied her passed a most pleasant day.—South of India Observer, Oct. 31.

MUDDY WATER FROM THE RED HILLS.—On the 19th of August last the Officiating President of the Madras Municipality complained to Government that the Executive Engineer of the Municipality had been obliged to shut off the water of the Red Hills Tank from the pipes, as it was so muddy that he was afraid it would choke the pipes with sediment. In consequence there was no supply of water for the fountains at Madras. Mr. Lee had found that the cause of the water being so muddy was that the sloping ground near Mr. Ritchie's house had been recently ploughed up, and that the heavy rains had washed much of the loosened earth into the tank. Major Oakes said he did not think the quantity of solid matter held in suspension by the water would be likely to choke the pipes, but if this was feared a filter was the proper remedy. The Board of Revenue is, however, of opinion that the inflow of muddy water from the newly ploughed up land might be stopped by means of traverse drains.—Madras Times.

A VERY STRANGE STORY.—It would appear that a clerk, employed in the High Court, Appellate Side, was, while returning home about 5 P.M. on Saturday last, after drawing his salary at the office, accosted near the St. Thome ice-house by a Hindoo, who appeared desirous of disposing of a nose ornament he had with him. Having entered into conversation with the clerk, the Hindu artfully drew him towards the shade cast by a neighbouring wall, and there asked him to scrutinise the jewel well, in order to satisfy himself that the stones were not counterfeit. While engaged in examining the stones, a peculiar dizziness seized him, and leaning against the wall for support, the unsuspecting clerk lapsed into a state of unconsciousness. When he came to, a few minutes after, he found, to his utter astonishment, that the Hindu was non est, and that he had been mysteriously robbed of a whole month's salary. As this facile method of acquiring money will very probably be resorted to again, the police should keep a sharp look out for any peripatetic mesmerists.—Madras Athenæum.

THE TRADE OF MADRAS.—The trade returns of Madras for the month of September show that the total value of goods imported into Madras in that month by sea was Rs. 27,85,093, against Rs. 30,42,234 imported in September 1871. In the past month we received cotton twist valued at Rs. 5,57,997 for 839,955 lbs.; dyed twist valued at Rs. 1,56,667 for 142,715 lbs.; gold thread 10,698 ozs., valued at Rs. 60,343; hides and skins valued at Rs. 12,797; grain at Rs. 34,188 for 10,698 cwt.; metals unwrought valued at Rs. 96,708; piece-goods, cotton and linen valued at Rs. 6,92,670; railway stores at Rs. 2,16,703; timber at Rs. 87,468; spirits at Rs. 87,214 for 8,797 gallons; malt liquor at Rs. 33,794 for 16,804 gallons; woollens valued at Rs. 36,838. There was only a small quantity of treasure imported last month at Rs. 1,74,241. The export trade of the port has been materially reduced. The total value of goods exported in the past month from Madras was Rs. 17,72,825, against Rs. 30,91,299, the value of goods exported in the corresponding month of last year. In the past month we shipped 309 cwt. of coffee, valued at Rs. 9,270; cotton valued at Rs. 4,70,240 for 20,991 cwt.; grain valued at Rs. 35,523 for 10,125 cwt.; hides and skins of the value of Rs. 4,38,517 for 36,967 corges (against 33,646 corges valued at Rs. 365,028 exported in the corresponding month last year); horns valued at Rs. 3,600; indigo Rs. 2,46,581 for 621 cwt.; marine stores valued at Rs. 6,210; piece-goods cotton valued at Rs. 1,66,914; seeds of the value of Rs. 64,952; sugar and joggery valued at Rs. 157,327 for 15,735 cwt.; bees' wax valued at Rs. 3,440; and oils, saltpetre, spices, and tobacco of little value. No specie was exported from Madras in the past month. Thirty-seven vessels with 30,949 tons arrived, and 33 ships with 25,930 tons left this port in the past month.—Madras Standard.

THE P. AND O. MAIL STEAMERS.

The following Memorial has been addressed from Bombay to the Director-General of Post-offices in India:—

"Sir,—As the official director of the Government Post-office, we, the undersigned passengers, who arrived at Bombay on the 28th inst., desire to bring to your notice the great, and, in our opinion, avoidable delay which has occurred in the conveyance of the above mail.

"The steam-ship Massilia brought the Southampton mail to Alexandria. She left Southampton at four P.M. on the 26th of September, and reached Gibraltar at three P.M. on the 2nd of October. She was thus 168 hours under steam. The distance being 1,151 miles, she went at the rate of a little less than six and a-quarter miles an hour.

"She left Gibraltar at eight P.M. on the 2nd of October, and reached Malta at midnight on the 6th of October. She was thus a hundred hours under steam, and the distance being 981 miles she went at the rate of 9.8 miles an hour.

"She left Malta on the 7th of October at 6.30 A.M., and reached Alexandria on the 12th at 7.30 A.M. She was thus 120 hours under steam. The distance being 819 miles, she went at the rate of 6.8 miles an hour.

"The Massilia thus took sixteen days and four hours to steam 2,951 miles, that being the distance between Southampton and Alexandria. Her mean average of mileage per hour was 7.6, and the contract time between the abovementioned ports is ten knots.

"In accordance with the time-table issued by the Peninsular and Oriental Company, the Massilia was due at Alexandria on the 9th of October. Owing to her delay in arriving at that port, the mails and passengers by the Malta (from Brindisi) were detained from 10.30 A.M. of the 10th of October, until seven P.M. on the 11th. The delay at Alexandria was thus thirty-two hours.

"The Surat received the mails at Suez. The passengers and mails reached Suez at 6.30 A.M. on the 12th, and left that port at 8.30 P.M. on the same day. The delay at Suez was thus thirteen and a-half hours, caused by the non-arrival of the cargo of the Massilia.

"The Surat reached Aden, distant from Suez 1,308 miles, at 7.30 A.M. on the 19th of October, having, as before stated, left Suez at 8.30 P.M. on the 12th. She was thus 155 hours under steam, and went at the rate of 8.4 miles per hour, the contract time being nine and a-half.

"The delay at Aden was twelve hours.

"The Surat left Aden at 7.30 P.M. on the 19th, and reached Bombay at seven o'clock this morning, the distance being 1,664 miles; she went at the rate of 8.1 miles per hour.

"Owing to her engine being disabled between Aden and Bombay, she was detained eleven hours.

"The total delay between Brindisi and Bombay was sixty-two and a-half hours, or two days and fourteen and a-half hours, which may be re-capitulated as follows:—

Delay at Alexandria, owing to the non-arrival of the Massilia	32 hours.
Delay at Suez, owing to the non-arrival of the cargo of the Massilia	13½ "
Delay at Aden	6 "
Delay between Aden and Bombay, owing to the engines being disabled	11 "
Total	62½ "

"It will be thus seen that neither the Massilia nor the Surat had sufficient steam-power to fulfil the contract time.

"We have reason to believe that the inefficiency of both steamers is well known to the company, and that in the case of the Surat she was sent home a short time ago for the express purpose of having her machinery put in order, which was not done in consequence of the strikes. We cannot consider this as a valid excuse, inasmuch as, independent of the fact of the company having in their employ on the China line more powerful vessels, it was also open to them to charter steamers. On this particular occasion the Hydaspes, a steamer of greater power than either the Massilia or Surat, might have been employed for the conveyance of the Southampton mail. Had this been done it is more than probable she would have reached Alexandria by the 9th or 10th of October, and thus the Malta, which brought the mails from Brindisi, would not have been delayed at Alexandria thirty-two hours, nor would the delay of twelve hours at Suez have occurred.

"At Suez there were two steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, the Sumatra and the Surat, the former of greater speed than the Surat, yet the mails were made over to the Surat, whilst the Sumatra was ordered to Calcutta, the reason being that the Sumatra could not accommodate the passengers for Bombay. It would thus appear that the mails are of secondary consideration, as compared with the desire of the Peninsular and Oriental Company to obtain as much passage-money as possible.

"It will further be observed that the passengers for Bombay, who could have been accommodated in the Sumatra, might have been put on board the Hydaspes, which had been sent to Suez through the Canal.—We have the honour to be, &c.,

"JAMES GORDON, Lieut-Col.,

For self and other Passengers on board the Surat.

STATION TALK.

BARODA, Oct. 20.—The weather is getting more pleasant day by day, the nights being deliciously cool just now. I am sorry to say though that fever is prevalent at present, and a great many are suffering from its effects. The chief topic of conversation here now is the intended great durbar at Bombay for the Governor-General. Rumour has it, that the 4th Rifles will attend the durbar, their garrison duties in the meanwhile being taken up by a regiment from Ahmedabad. His Highness the Guicowar's Dussera Sowaree went off as usual with great pomp and magnificence. A great number of people have passed through Baroda recently, on their way to the great Jathra at Dakore, where stands the most celebrated temple in Guzerat.

KHANDALLA, Oct. 19.—As yet very few of the sahib logue have come to take refuge in the charming climate of Khandalla. Mathe-ran still bears off the palm, though the trouble of getting there is much greater than that of getting here, and the weather cannot possibly be cooler; but the folk of Bombay seem to love society so much that they will endure any amount of hardships rather than give up the pleasures of the evening promenade and the seductive delights of gossiping about nothing. Our mornings here are deliciously cool, and baths become a luxury. It is only between twelve and three o'clock that we have any heat, and the moonlight evenings we have lately experienced fully make up for those three hours. There is little news beyond the hackneyed topic of the weather. There are a good many bungalows still unlet, and indeed seem likely to be so. The Honourable Byramjee Jeejeebhoy is staying at his delightful bungalow, and nowhere could a finer site for a house be found. The traveller's bungalow is unoccupied, and the village tatoo-wallah is so disgusted that he talks of selling his nags and giving up the business. Won't anyone ward off that disastrous calamity? If they come here they may make sure of getting a change from the sweltering climate of Bombay to an exhilarating and bracing atmosphere, and are sure to be able to spend a pleasant holiday in one of the prettiest spots in our presidency.—Times of India Correspondent.

MAHABLESHWUR, Oct. 24.—The weather is all that can be wished for in every way. The bund for sending water into the bazaar is full of water. It is quite a success. It has been expensive, but the bazaar will now derive considerable benefit from it. I believe that the water of this place is the best I have ever tasted in India. We have had some picnics at Elphinstone Point. People from Bombay are improving in appearance. Our fearful drawback is that you cannot go out without being in danger of meeting tigers or hearing the shouts of waga, which are heard every day. Between twelve and two o'clock in the day one killed two bullocks at one place. Then a man minding cattle has been eaten, a woman gathering sticks partly eaten, and a bullock taken out of a man's house in the day time. This tiger was seen last night at Mount Douglas, and between ten and eleven o'clock yesterday at "Leason Lodge" and "Paradise Lodge" the day before. There is a strong party going out in search of him this morning. I hear that there are three tigers about.

MARWAR, Oct. 17.—Locusts have left us, and fortunately doing much less damage than was expected, and we have reason to be thankful that no Deyrah camelite locusts came to our side. The flight that visited Agra must also have been of the same caste as the Deyrah gentlemen. Fever continues to rage not only in Jodhpore and Palice, but every village in Marwar is suffering more or less. Deaths are numerous, but as no register is kept, it is difficult to say what the average mortality is. Maharaj Koomar Bader Singhjee, one of the sons of his Highness, who left Jodhpore some twelve months ago for Jhamnugger under the displeasure of the Maharajah, returned some days ago to Jodhpore, much improved in appearance and manner and it is to be hoped, with some improved ideas. Jorawur Singh continues in Ajmere, apparently satisfied with his fate. I have heard, however, that he has been foolish enough to entertain the idea of a legal contest for the guddee. His Highness is still at Mount Aboo, but may be expected shortly to return to his capital. The Agent Governor-General will leave Aboo for Ajmere in a few days, as also the Political Agent, but whether he will proceed at once to Jodhpore or make his annual tour, via Mullani, is yet unknown. Biorjah Singjee, of the nobility of Jodhpore, proceeded to Aboo a few days ago. His name for the last twelve months has been in every one's mouth as the coming Dewan. Since the removal of Murdan Ali Khan from office, a year or more since, no pukka dewan has been appointed. The Naib Dewanship has been held by a Guzeratee possessing no abilities for such an office, and almost an imbecile. Fortunately he has been ably assisted by the private secretary of his Highness, Pandit Sheo Narain, a Cashmiree, I believe, by birth, an excellent English scholar, possessing sound common sense, and having at all times a warm interest in the well-being of his royal master. Our made roads are again in order, and the usual country tracks passable. Rapidly the country is drying up, and in many places a straw parchedness is fast making its appearance. The break on the B. B. and C. I. Railway places us at great disadvantage in getting up supplies from Bombay, consequently Ajmere and Nusseerabad are doing an increase of trade. In the former city one European firm from Agra has established a branch there, and very soon Messrs. Lewin and Co., of Agra, intend opening a branch also. I do not think Ajmere is quite ripe yet for too much opposition. It will be some time before the railway gets there. Weather during the day warm, nights very cold. Rain evidently left us for another season.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

THE BOMBAY UNIVERSITY.—We see from the Government Gazette that 909 candidates have presented their applications for the Matriculation Examination in connection with the Bombay University, which commences from Monday, the 18th Nov.

A NEW SPINNING COMPANY.—It is stated that Mr. Dwarkadas Vussonjee, a well-known Bhattia merchant, has started a new Spinning Company in Bombay, and that H.H. the Rajah of Dhrangudra has promised to buy one hundred shares of it.

MILITARY.—The E.D. Royal Horse Artillery marched from Mhow via Khundwa and Deolallee, en route for England, on the 2nd November. The Battery is under the command of Major LeCocq. Its personnel will be left at Mhow for the relieving battery of the C. Brigade, which is expected to arrive in February.—Deccan Herald.

A SUGGESTION FOR A PETITION TO THE VICEROY.—The Akhbari Soudagur advises the people of Bombay to prepare and present a petition containing all the grievances of the people, to H.E. the Viceroy of India by the hands of a deputation, which should wait on his Lordship to welcome him and thank him for visiting different parts of the Empire to enable him to have a personal knowledge of them.

DUTY ON COTTON AND SILK CLOTH AT BULSAR.—A Gujeratee paper complains that the mode of levying a duty on cotton and silk cloth in the town of Bulsar is very objectionable. The Municipal officers and dealers too often disagree in the valuation of the goods, and the dispute has to be invariably carried to the other dealers of the town for settlement, a mode which leads to delay and inconvenience.

ARRIVALS AT BOMBAY.—Colonel Anderson, Political Agent of Kattywar, Captain Nutt, Assistant Political Agent, and Mr. Krishnajeeluxmon, Extra Assistant Political Agent, arrived here by rail on Thursday evening. Colonel J. W. Osborne, C.B., Political Agent, Bhopal, arrived in Bombay by the G. I. P. Railway on Tuesday, accompanied by about forty followers. Colonel Osborne has taken up his residence temporarily at the Adelphi Family Hotel, and his followers at the Byculla Bazaar.—Bombay Gazette, Nov. 11.

THE BHOWNUGGER STATE.—A correspondent of the Bombay Sum-machar states that the Joint Administration of the State of Bhownuggur by Messrs. Percival and Gowreesluaker has been productive of good. These gentlemen have settled the assessment of land on the average of the realisation of the past three years, and have thereby put a stop to a great source of plunder of the State revenues by the karbhares. The Joint Administrators have also done well in checking wasteful extravagance of several State departments.

DENGUE AT HYDRABAD, SIND.—After visiting almost every second man in the city of Hyderabad, and every woman and child, dengue has now stalked into the houses of the great. Dr. Holmstead, the Civil Surgeon, was laid up for two days, and now we regret to hear that Judge Phillpotts and Colonel Phillips, the Collector, are down. Strange to say, that although a large number of men of the 2nd Beloochees have suffered from dengue fever, the European soldiers at Hyderabad, although not very far from the Belooch lines, are in the best of health.—Sindian.

DEATH OF LIEUT. C. K. RENNELL.—We have to record a lamentable incident of the late steeple-chases at the pleasant station of Mhow. On the 2nd Nov. Lieutenant C. K. Rennell, of the 15th Hussars, one of the riders, was fatally injured by his horse, which fell at a hedge jump, unseating and dragging his rider and kicking him on his left temple. All that medical aid could do failed to save the young officer's life. He expired about twenty minutes after the accident. Mr. Rennell was only twenty-three years of age.—Bombay Gazette, Nov. 11.

KURRACHEE MUNICIPALITY.—It has been definitely decided, we learn on authority which cannot be questioned, that the duties of secretary and surveyor to the Kurrachee Municipality are to be discharged by two distinct parties, in other words, that the appointment, hitherto filled by one and the same person, is to be divided. This is exactly in accordance with the suggestion we made the other day. Mr. Treppas, we are informed, will be permanently installed as surveyor, on a salary of Rs. 350 per mensem, and the secretary is to draw Rs. 500. The selection to be made for a secretary will be conferred from all accounts on Mr. Nash, who for some years discharged the duties of the office.—Sindian, Nov. 2.

THE PRINCES AND CHIEFS OF THE DECCAN.—His Highness Ramchunder Rao Appa Saheb, Chief of Jamkhundee, arrived at the Poona station yesterday morning, and will leave this morning for Bombay. The Maharajah of Kolapore is expected to arrive here on the 12th inst. en route to Bombay. Each day almost witnesses the arrival here of one or more of the Chiefs of the Deccan on their way to Bombay to attend the grand durbar there in honour of the Viceroy's visit to this Presidency. The great Deccan Sardars seem ready to vie with each other in giving honour to the nobleman who so worthily represents our gracious Queen in India, and we feel sure that their loyalty will be highly appreciated by his Excellency the Viceroy now, as well as by the Empress of India when the tidings of it reach her ears.—Deccan Herald, Nov. 6.

ARRIVAL OF TROOP SHIPS AT BOMBAY.—H.M.'s Indian Troop Ship Serapis, 4,000 tons, 700 H. P., Captain H. D. Grant, arrived on Friday, the 8th Nov., from Queenstown, which she left on the 6th Oct., Port Said on the 21st, Suez on the 25th in the evening, arriving at Aden on the 31st, and leaving on the same evening for Bombay. She brings the 40th Regiment and details. During the voyage there were one birth and one death on board. On the 22nd and 23rd Oct., through the breaking down of a tug, the ship had to be run on shore to avoid a collision, and she remained on shore for two days and had to lighten by discharge of coal, anchors, &c., before she could get off again. She enjoyed fair weather throughout the voyage. On Monday, Nov. 4, H.M.'s troop ship Junna, 4,173 tons, Captain F. W. Richard, arrived in Bombay harbour from Queenstown (29th Sept.) and Cannanore (2nd Nov.) with troops. Two companies of the 43rd Regiment were landed at Calicut on the 1st Nov., and on the 2nd Nov. the head-quarters of the 43rd Regiment were landed at Cannanore. On the Junna's voyage she experienced very fine weather, and on board two births occurred but no deaths.

A CURIOUS RETURN.—Commencing on Jan. 1, 1873, quarterly reports will be furnished by divisions and districts to the Adjutant gen.'s office, Simla, showing in detail both station and regimental guards and duties, and giving the average number of nights in bed enjoyed by the several ranks in each regiment, and the number of escorts performed. H.E. the C. in C. desires general officers in command to understand that it is their special duty to check, by personal examination of weekly and monthly returns, the unnecessary employment of the soldiers of both armies on guards, escorts, and orderly duties; and they must also ascertain that no men are excused their regular turn of duty because they happen to have some regimental employment which really carries with it no claim to such exemption. In making the necessary calculation to ascertain the amount of guard duty performed by those under their command, only the number of men available for guard duty must be divided by the number of men on duty, and not the total number of men borne on the strength of the regiment. From this quotient must be deducted one night on duty, and the remainder will show the actual number of nights in bed. The monthly return of guards now furnished will be discontinued.

MAHOMMEDAN EDUCATION.

RESOLUTION OF THE MADRAS GOVERNMENT.

The Government have taken the subject of Mahomedan education into consideration, and have published a resolution. It has long been felt that this part of the native community was not receiving its fair share of employment under Government. This resolution shows that there are only nineteen Mahomedans filling situations under Government, against four hundred and seventeen Hindus. The Government have come to the conclusion that this is an evil both politically and socially, and that it ought to be remedied; and therefore this resolution has been published. The resolution notices that the Mahomedans have not availed themselves of existing educational opportunities as they might have done. But then it is held that those opportunities have not been sufficient; and, in order to rectify this, Government propose that special schools shall be provided in other Government schools, and that they shall be taught in their own language. Up to this time the Hindustani language has not been taught in the Government schools, and the Mahomedans have been obliged to read a Hindu vernacular, and to pass an examination in it if they wished to enter the lower grades of the service, and it is well known that they do not succeed in this, and hence the few who are in the service of Government. As there are very few Mahomedan teachers to be procured, the Government instructs the Director of Public Instruction to train them for the work, and till then Hindu teachers may be employed, for plenty can be found who are able to speak Hindustani. With the educational advantages that the Government have pointed out, it is thought that more Mahomedans will qualify for Government employ. It is also asserted in the resolution that the Mahomedans think that the Government and its officers are disinclined to employ Mahomedans whether they are qualified or not, and of course it is very necessary that this idea should be dispelled altogether, and the way to do this is by giving employment to a fair proportion of Mahomedans who may have passed the prescribed tests, and by the proper promotion of those who are already employed.

The Government have also ordered another change to be made with regard to education. Up to this time the normal schools of the Presidency have been institutions of general education as well as special. Young men have been prepared for the different examinations as well as learning how to teach. In future those who enter these schools will only be instructed in the art of teaching, and other institutions will have to prepare the candidates for admission. The Government also propose to have a training class for elementary schools, as well as for the higher and middle. The educational department is and has been very unpopular with young Hindus, and they will not enter it if they can get into any other department, and if they do enter it they try to get out of it as soon as possible.

EXECUTION OF KOOKA PRISONERS AT MALAIR-KOTLAH.

From H. L. Dampier, Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, to T. D. Forsyth, Esq., C.S., C.B.—No. 1871, dated Simla, Oct. 10, 1872.

I am directed by the Gov. general in Council to acknowledge the receipt of your two statements, dated July 1 and 27, 1872, containing certain representations relative to the censure expressed by the Government of India of your conduct on the occasion of the Kooka outbreak at Malodh and Malair-Kotlah in January last.

2. Those statements will be forwarded for the consideration of the Secretary of State with the opinion of the Governor gen. in Council; but H.E. in Council desires to notice at once such of the explanations furnished by you as appear to him to require some modification of the account which is given of the circumstances of the execution in the latter addressed to the Punjab Government on April 30 last, so far as they affect your conduct.

3. H.E. regrets that the Government should have been led into the error of attributing to you the use of an expression in your letter confirming Mr. Cowan's action in the execution of the forty-nine prisoners which was not actually used by you. The copy of the letter which Mr. Cowan furnished to the Government, and which was quoted in the letter to the Government of the Punjab of April 30, was as follows:—"I fully approve and confirm all you have done. You have acted admirably. I am coming out." It appears from subsequent inquiry that the copy was not accurate, and that the real letter was—"A line to say I fully approve and confirm all you have done. You have acted with energy and promptitude. I am coming out." Although the correction of the letter does not affect the fact of the full approbation and confirmation of Mr. Cowan's conduct by you, the use of the word "admirably," which was erroneously attributed to you, appears to the Governor gen. in Council to be calculated to convey the impression of a more cordial sympathy with Mr. Cowan's action than the words really used implied.

4. The Governor general in Council notes your statement that, when you approved and confirmed Mr. Cowan's proceedings, you were not aware that Mr. Cowan had put to death six men after the receipt of your letter of January 17, directing him not to act in a summary manner, and accepts your explanation on this point. As it is possible that the inference may be drawn from the letter of April 30 to the Punjab Government that you were aware of the fact, H.E. thinks that the doubt should be cleared up. Your statement, an extract from which is contained in the letter of March 22, shows, however, that you believed Mr. Cowan to have received, before any of the prisoners were executed, general instructions from you, contained in a previous letter, enjoining legal action, written before Mr. Cowan had proposed to execute any prisoners summarily.—H. L. DAMPIER, Officiating Secretary to the Government of India.

Home.

OFFICERS' PASSAGE.—An order has been issued from the Horse Guards stating that subaltern officers arriving in India for the first time are entitled to have their heavy baggage, to the extent of 400lb., conveyed at the public expense.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA.—An extraordinary meeting of the proprietors of the National Bank of India (Limited) is called for the 10th December, to confirm the special resolution passed on the 19th ult. altering some of the regulations of the undertaking.

INDIAN MONEY ORDERS.—Persons sending money orders to England should be particular in advising the receiver as to the correct name and address of the sender. Much money is lying unclaimed in the Post-office in London in consequence of the want of this information.

THE REPRESENTATION OF KINCARDINESHIRE.—Although General Sir George Balfour had intimated that he would not come forward as a candidate for this county vacancy, yet the favourable opinion expressed of him at the meeting of the Kincardineshire Farmers' Association, held on Monday at Laurencekirk, has weighed so much with him that he has consented to oppose Mr. Hercules Scott if no one else should come forward.

P. AND O. COMPANY.—The report of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, to be submitted to the meeting on the 6th proximo, states that the net profit for the year amounted to £169,204, out of which it is proposed to pay a dividend of 3 per cent. for the six months, besides 1 per cent. from the underwriting account, making, with the distribution in June, 7 per cent. for the year. The expenditure exhibits a diminution of £38,000, but this has been more than counterbalanced by the reduction in the rates of passage money.

AN INDIAN GRIEVANCE.—A lady writes to the editor of the Times as follows:—"Sir,—Will you afford me a small space in your paper to ask for an explanation of what seems to me an undeniable grievance? My husband an officer in the army, holding a Government appointment in India, has to pay at the rate of nearly six per cent. for all money he transmits to me. In our own particular case we lose £80 a year by this transmission. Is there no way by which this might be obviated? Could not Indian officials be enabled to give orders upon some authorised bank in London, so as to be saved the great expense of sending money direct from India?—A SUFFERER."

INDIA OFFICE.—MR. W. G. GOODLIFFE'S RETIREMENT.—Mr. W. G. Goodliffe, late Accountant-General of the India-office, has, in consequence of the abolition of his office, commenced business as a public accountant at 149, Palmerston-buildings, Old Broad-street. When Mr. Goodliffe was made the head of the Indian Account Department, Sir Charles Wood (now Lord Halifax), the Secretary of State, considered him the "fittest man" he knew for the post, and he has since borne testimony to the "great zeal and ability" with which he discharged his official duties. On his retirement a "special" annuity was conferred on him by the Government in recognition of his important services, and this fact is sufficient to prove that in his new vocation he well deserves public support.

SUEZ CANAL COMPANY.—The following letter has just been issued from the Suez Canal Transit Agency:—"Notwithstanding the recent decision of the Tribunal of Commerce at Paris in favour of the Messageries Maritimes Company, we beg to inform the Government and steamship owners that the Suez Canal Company intend abiding by the terms of their act of concession, which gives them the right, as is shown by official documents published at that period, of levying a tax of ten francs per gross ton measurement. By adopting the English mode of measurement, and applying it to every ship passing through the Canal, they establish a uniform treatment for all flags, and thereby secure to the British shipowner immunity from those unfair advantages that steamers of other countries might derive by sailing with inaccurate papers.—MOSSES and MITCHELL, Accredited Transit Agents."

NEW INDIAN TEA COMPANY.—A new undertaking, entitled the London and Terai Tea Company (Limited) has been formed, to purchase and work tea plantations comprising 709 acres of land, held direct from the Government, in the Darjeeling Terai, in the Bengal Presidency of India. It is mentioned that the Terai Gardens are the most productive and valuable of any in India, and that the yield from these gardens when they reach their fourth year will, it is expected, be as much as six maunds per acre. The sum to be paid for the property is £12,000, viz., £7,000 in cash upon taking possession of the property, and the remaining £5,000 out of the profits when they exceed 7 per cent. The payment to the shareholders of a minimum dividend of 7 per cent. for three years will be secured by the deposit of the above-mentioned £5,000 with the directors. The capital is £30,000, in 6,000 shares of £5 each.

THE SUEZ CANAL.—The Times correspondent writes on the 19th of November:—"The following mercantile steamers have called here to coal on their way to and from India, via the Suez Canal:—The Orchis, 1,138 tons on the 14th inst., 65 days from Hong Kong, with a general cargo for London; the Una, 960 tons, on the 17th, 19 days from London and 6 from Gibraltar, with a general cargo for Bombay; the Redgauntlet, 917 tons, the same day, 11 days from London, with a general cargo for Bombay; the Scindia, 1,423 tons, on the 18th, 12 days from London, with a general cargo for Calcutta; the Cingalese, 834 tons, on the 19th, 36 days from Colombo, and 6 from Port Said, with a general cargo for London; the Crosby, 1,118 tons, the same day, 45 days from Calcutta and 6 from Port Said, with a general cargo for London. The Dutch steamer Prins Hendrik passed in sight of Malta on the 18th inst., from Holland bound for Batavia."

EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.—The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on Nov. 25, at Guildhall Tavern, Gresham-street, Mr. J. F. Leith, M.P., in the chair. Mr. J. T. Wood, the secretary, having read the notice convening the meeting, the report was taken as read. The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report and statement of accounts, said that they had, on the whole, made progress both with the goods and passenger traffic. The increase had not been so great as they expected. The tremendous floods last year had done injury to the line, and had very much interfered with the traffic, by reducing the returns. Since the casualty caused by the floods had been made good the traffic had been progressing. The works of reconstruction would all be entirely completed this year. The gross receipts for the half-year ending the 30th of June last amounted to £128,528, against £119,168 in the same half of 1871, showing an increase of £9,360, or 7.85 per cent.

EXPORT OF BULLION.—The following are the exports by the Steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, on the dates mentioned. From Southampton, per Pekin, November 7, 1872: Gold—Bombay, £1,225; Ceylon, £115; Madras, £5,000; Singapore, £2,000; Silver—Penang, £25,000; Singapore, £133,200; per Mooltan, Gold—Bombay, £270; Ceylon, £300. Subjoined are the exports to Eastern Ports by the Steamers of the Messageries Imperiales. From Marseilles, per Peluse and Ilissus, 10th Oct., and 30th Oct., 1872: Gold—Alexandria, £123,264; per Amazona, 27th Oct., 1872: Gold—Alexandria, £350; per Peluse, 31st Oct., 1872: Gold—Alexandria, £181,440; per Nil, 7th Nov., 1872: Gold—Alexandria, £77,999; per Ara, 10th Nov., 1872: Gold—Pondicherry, £119; Madras, £624; Calcutta, £748; Silver—Pondicherry, £370; Calcutta, £4,820. Price of silver: Bar, 4s. 11½d. per oz.; Mexican dollars, old die, 5s. 0½d. per oz.; new die, 4s. 10d. per oz. 5 Francs, 4s. 11d. per oz.

MAJOR-GENERAL DAVENEY.—We have to announce the death of this distinguished officer, which took place at Heigham Grove, near Norwich, at an early hour on Nov. 24. Though by no means the senior in the list of general officers, Major-General Daveney had seen a great deal of service in all parts of the world, and her Majesty had no more loyal or devoted servant. He served with distinction in Canada during the rebellion of 1837, and in the Crimea in 1854, where he was present at the battles of the Alma and Balaclava, as also at the siege of Sebastopol. He subsequently served during the mutiny in India, and eventually retired on full pay. Major-General Daveney had three clasps for the Crimea, as also the Order of the Medjidie and several other decorations presented by the Sultan to British officers who had served in the war against Russia. He left directions that he should be interred in his uniform, and that his remains should be placed in the family burial-place at Colton, where the Daveneys have been landowners for many generations.

DEATH OF LORD HARRIS.—This nobleman died suddenly on Nov. 23, at Belmont, his seat near Faversham, Kent. The deceased, Right Hon. George Francis Robert Harris, Baron Harris, of Seringapatam and Mysore, in the East Indies, and of Belmont, Kent, in the peerage of the United Kingdom, was the eldest son of William George, second Lord Harris, by his first wife, Elizabeth Serena Anue, daughter of Mr. William Dick, of Tullimet. He was born Aug. 14, 1810, and succeeded his father in the family honours in May, 1845. The deceased peer married April 16, 1850, Sarah, second daughter of the Ven. George Cummius, archdeacon of Trinidad, by whom (she died at Barbadoes in the spring of 1853) he leaves issue a son, Hon. George Robert Canning, who attained his majority in February last; and an only daughter, Hon. Frances Charlotte, born in August, 1852. The late Lord Harris was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, at which university in 1831 he was 4th class in classics, and was created a D.C.L. there in 1863. In May, 1846, his lordship was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Trinidad; and in November the following year appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief. He was subsequently, in February, 1854, appointed Governor of Madras. On his return home from that presidency he was appointed a Lord-in-Waiting to the Queen, which Court appointment he held till March, 1863, when he was selected to fill the distinguished post of Chamberlain to her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales. His lordship had been Major of the East Kent Mounted Rifles since 1855. Lord Harris was grandson of General Harris, who was elevated to the peerage in August, 1815, for his distinguished military services in India, and who was commander-in-chief at the capture of Seringapatam, and also at Mysore. His son, William George, father of the deceased peer, was at his death a lieutenant-general in the army and Colonel of the 73rd Foot; also a Companion of the Order of the Bath, and a Knight of the Order of the Guelphs of Hanover.

DEATH OF SIR DONALD M'LEOD.—Sir Donald M'Leod met his death on Thursday evening under very distressing circumstances. He was at the Gloucester-road station of the Metropolitan Railway, and having attempted to enter a carriage while the train was in motion, he fell between that and the platform, and was most severely injured, both his legs and his left arm being almost severed from his body. Sir Donald was at once taken to St. George's Hospital, where every effort was made to save his life, but in vain. At first quite unconscious, the sufferer became quite sensible before his death, which occurred at ten o'clock of the same night. Sir Donald M'Leod, K.C.S.I., C.B., was a son of the late General M'Leod, of the Bengal Engineers, and grandson of Donald M'Leod, of Geanies, Ross-shire. He was born in 1810, educated at the High School of Edinburgh, at Dulwich, Putney, and Haileybury. He entered the Bengal Civil Service in 1828; was appointed assistant magistrate at Monghir 1829; assistant commissioner 1838; magistrate and collector at Benares 1843; commissioner of Julundur 1849; and financial commissioner of the Punjab in 1865, and was at Lahore during the Indian mutinies. He married, in 1854, Frances Mary, eldest daughter of Sir Robert Montgomery but was left a widower in the following year. He was created C.B. in 1860, and K.C.S.I. in 1866.

THE ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.—At the meeting of this society on Monday evening, the 25th ult., the President, Sir Henry Rawlinson, announced that the arrangements were complete for the departure of Lieutenant Grandy for the Congo, and Lieutenant Cameron for Zanzibar, whence the latter will proceed into the interior of Africa under instructions from Sir Bartle Frere, the necessary funds having been furnished by Mr. James Young, of Kelly, so well known in connection with the manufacture of paraffin, that gentleman having sent to the Council a cheque for £2,000. The papers read were "Survey of the Garo Hills, and the Ascent of Mount Khas," by Major Godwin-Austen; and an "Account of the Loshai Country," from the reports of the surveyors. Sir Cecil Beadon made an admirable speech upon the former paper, and General Strachey followed with a powerful attack upon the supineness of the Indian Government, showing, on the authority of even the Governor-General himself, that our knowledge of possessions which have been under our dominion for more than a century was next to nil; whilst on the other hand the Russians were no sooner settled at Samarkand than observatories were established, and a perfect system of scientific observations undertaken, so that the Russian Government is as well informed of the state of the remotest parts of their empire as our own Government is of the villages immediately surrounding our more important Indian centres.

MADRAS IRRIGATION AND CANAL COMPANY.—The report of the directors states that, in addition to executing repairs and maintenance operations, the company's engineering staff had during the past six months been engaged in constructing protective works—side escape weirs, to insure full relief to the Main Canal during storms—also in strengthening portions of the higher retaining or embankment walls, and although those protective and strengthening works were not yet completed, such satisfactory progress had been made as to remove all cause for anxiety as to the result of future storms. Water was admitted from the Toombuddra River into the Main Canal on the 1st of June last, and in due course into the distributive channels, and it had since continued to flow uninterruptedly without accident. The completion of the revenue account for the season of 1871-2 had been delayed until an arrangement should be made regarding the payment to the company for the water supplied to tanks belonging to the Government, but about 10,000 acres were supplied with water, irrespective of that given to the Government tanks. The whole of the debentures due up to this date, amounting to £92,000, had been paid off, and the debenture debt reduced accordingly. The Main Canal had been, for conservancy purposes, divided into two sections, the upper section extending from Soonkasala to the end of the ninety-fifth mile, under the charge of Mr. Wilks, assisted by Mr. Crawford; and the lower section, commencing with the 96th mile and ending near to Cuddapah, of which Mr. Kuorpp, assisted by Mr. Bradbury, had the charge; the whole 190 miles having been superintended by Mr. A. Browning. For the month of June last he reported that, having carefully examined the canal from Kurnool to Cuddapah, the supply of water was abundant, and the whole canal in very good working order. From a comparison of the water register of this year with that for 1870 and 1871 it appeared that the leakage has been reduced by 20,000 cubic yards per hour. Mr. Wilks reported that the state of the banks throughout the upper sections seemed to be good; and Mr. Kuorpp, as to the lower sections, stated that water had been kept running in the canal sufficient for present requirements without accident or interruption. Mr. Browning, referring to the month of April, stated that the revenue for the past season would be, on the upper section, from 3,937 acres, £1,975; and on the lower section, on 6,107 acres, £1,795. So that he expected the total revenue of the canal for the past season would be Rs. 37,699, or £3,770, for the irrigation and flooding of about 10,000 acres, and the supply of water to Kurnool Town. In the coming season (1872) he expected a very large increase, unless some unforeseen event should interfere. The existing rules connected with irrigation from the company's canal having in practice been found to be insufficient, and to have a retarding influence, negotiations had been commenced, and were now in progress, with Government for their modification.

NAUTICAL INCIDENTS.

The Dhoolia (s.), for Calcutta, has anchored at Ryde with engines out of order. The P. and O. steamer Mooltan, from Southampton, arrived at Gibraltar Nov. 29, experienced severe weather, lost three boats, and received other damage.

The following letter, from the passengers by the India, has been addressed to Messrs. R. Rubartino and Co., Genoa:—

"We, first-class passengers by the s.s. India, from Bombay to Genoa, have much pleasure in stating that we have found the accommodation in the India very complete and comfortable, and the food excellent. We have received great attention and kindness from Capt. Dodero and the other officers of the ship, and we think that, if the excellence and comfort of the vessels of this company, and the beauty of the voyage between Suez and Genoa were better known, they would attract many passengers."

our railway communications, by organising our power, and, above all, by securing the respect and affection of our subjects. Once render the natives well-affected to our rule, and Russian intrigues would be without scope or opportunity. With a compact empire and a contented people we might afford to laugh at the threats of our neighbour. Not for years or generations yet to come can the power of Russia in the East be anything like a match for ours. We have got all the riches of the plains, while she has nothing but the wilderness and poverty of the hills. True, these rugged regions are tenanted by martial tribes at her disposal; but there are no better soldiers in Asia than we can command by tens of thousands in Hindostan. Moreover, intrigue and rupees are as much at our service as at hers, and we have a body of officers, civil as well as military, second to none in the world. We do not think the prospect a bad one; we are very sure it would not be improved by an expedition to Tartary or Afghanistan. Possibly the policy of Russia may be as pacific as it is just now represented, but, we repeat, it is not requisite for our line of argument to build on any such assumption. We know that we ourselves advanced from East to West, if not with reluctance, at any rate without set design. We had no option in the matter; and though, perhaps, Anglo-Indians on the spot looked contentedly on successive annexations, it is certain they were regarded with something like alarm at home. Up to the year 1850, in fact, we advanced to meet Russia far more rapidly than she advanced to meet us. If the Russians should now plead compulsion and helplessness in defence of their conquests, we could not reject the argument, for we have traversed the very same ground. We may put what trust we please in the innocence of their intentions, but we cannot gainsay their professions. If we fight, we can only do so on the plainly avowed principle of keeping them at a distance. We should have to say that, however peaceable or advantageous their mission in the East might be, and whatever the provocations they might receive from the tribes around them, they must not transgress a certain line. Even then, however, the policy would quickly reduce itself to an absurdity. Its object would be to establish a broad tract of debatable ground—say, the territory of Afghanistan—between ourselves and the Russians; but how, except by our own advance to the western frontiers of the Afghans, could that object be secured; and, when we had thus advanced, where would be the debatable ground? Practically Afghanistan itself would have become a British province, and we should be producing the very collision we professed to dread. The whole question, comprehensive as it is, can be brought within the narrowest compass. Assume, not as an inevitable event, but as a possible contingency, that we shall have to fight with Russia for the Empire of India—where should the battle ground be? We can make it where we please. We can stay where we are and wait for the coming enemy in the Punjab. We can cross the border, meet the foe half-way, and take up a new frontier further to the West, as we have done a score of times before. By so doing, however, we should be exhausting our resources while we precipitated what, after all, might be an avoidable collision; whereas by establishing ourselves firmly within our own dominions we secure ourselves at once the greatest advantage in the event of a conflict, and the best chance of escaping it altogether.

THE EAST AFRICAN SLAVE-TRADE.—When conversing with Indian merchants who have been in Africa, they have affirmed to us that Spanish agents convey slaves from the east coast of Africa in vessels carrying the French flag. We did not allude to this matter before, because we were afraid there might be some mistake in the statement; but that such things have been done under the French flag is rendered certain by a letter, which has been placed in our hands, dated Zanzibar, the 17th July, 1860, from General Rigby, then Colonel Rigby, the Consul and Political Agent at that place, and from which letter we are permitted to publish the following important extract:—"A slave trade is still being carried on here by a low vile Spaniard under French protection. A month ago a Spanish slave dealer from Cuba arrived here, and the French Consul has taken him under his wing; it was soon discovered that picked slaves were being purchased at double the usual price for some foreign market; it was known to every soul in the place that these Spaniards were secretly purchasing them to be shipped to Cuba. I stirred up the Sultan and told him and all the chief Arabs that if they did not take energetic measures to stop this I felt certain that the importation of slaves into Zanzibar from the mainland would be entirely stopped. I told them that the slave trade was now prohibited by the consent of all nations from every part of the coast of Africa except the Zanzibar dominions; that these Arabs could not pretend to any right to steal men and children in Central Africa and bring them here for sale. The Arabs now all look upon the slave trade here as doomed to soon end, especially as I have lately emancipated all the slaves belonging to Hindoos and Banians, to the number of 3,605 persons. Up to now the Sultan has got hold of 186 of the slaves purchased for this vile Spaniard, and at my urgent request he has emancipated them, giving to each a legal certificate of freedom, a new dress, and a piece of ground. Some time ago the French Consul showed me a despatch from Walewski legalising the slave trade: on reading it I said, 'Why, this is the slave trade pure and simple.' He replied, 'Of course it is.' What a curse this traffic is to East Africa, and does no good to these vile Arabs, who are becoming more debased and greater drunkards every day."—Bombay Gazette.

THE RUSSIANS IN CENTRAL ASIA.

The Times maintains that, be the intentions of Russia what they may, it has never yet been, and would not now be, our interest to cross our frontier and march out to meet her with the hope of arresting her career. If we must fight, we had better fight on the borders of India than on the borders of Afghanistan. Of course, we could give her trouble where she is, and make the conquest or pacification of the Tartar Khanates a difficult task. But it is not worth our while, on a survey of the whole case, to precipitate a conflict on such conditions, or to carry our arms to such a field. We shall do better by maturing our resources within our own dominions, by perfecting

PROSPECTUS.

Mr. CRASKE desires to receive Boys at an early age—as soon as they can read well—in order that he may have charge of their Education from the very commencement of their studies.

Great care is taken that the elementary subjects are first thoroughly mastered, and that each Boy writes a good legible hand.

The next two or three years are devoted to Classical* and Mathematical work; and Mr. CRASKE is confident that the best of his Boys will be found able, at the age of Thirteen, to compete successfully for the various Scholarships now open to competition at Eton, Harrow, Winchester, and other great Public Schools.

The Classical and English Department is under the direction of AUSTIN R. WHITWAY, Esq., Graduate in Classical Honours of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Mr. CRASKE himself takes charge of Arithmetic, Euclid, Algebra, and the higher Mathematics. Each Boy, in these subjects, is under his own personal instruction.

The French and German Languages are taught by competent Masters.

TERMS:

For each Boarder	60 Guineas.
Those who remain after Thirteen
Years of Age	80 Guineas.
Day Boys and Weekly Boarders by Special Agreement.

These Terms include Drawing and Drilling. The charge for Laundry is also included. The only extra subject is German, the charge for which is Two Guineas per Quarter.

Mr. CRASKE considers it an essential part of a Boy's Education that he should be taught to Swim. He has, therefore, constructed a Bath twenty-five feet in length, with warming apparatus, to carry out this object effectually.

There are three Vacations in the year—a fortnight at Easter, seven weeks at Midsummer, and five weeks at Christmas.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

THE LIVER, THE STOMACH, AND THEIR AFFECTIONS.—Alterations of temperature, inclement weather, a troubled mind, sedentary habits, excesses of the table, and a gay, reckless mode of life, exert the most deleterious influence over the liver and stomach. When once these organs are fairly out of order, great inroads are quickly made on the general state of the health; the constitution, which has been deprived of two of its noblest organs, soon gives way, and diseases quickly follow, from which, if neglected, the worst consequences will inevitably result. If a course of Holloway's Pills be persevered in all will be well again, as they are the finest and best corrective of all disorders of the liver and the stomach.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S (Ex. Army Med. Staff) CHLORODYNE

IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood stated that Dr. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the inventor of CHLORODYNE; that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, being the inventor was deliberately untrue, which he regretted had been sworn to. Eminent Hospital Physicians of London stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they prescribe it largely, and mean no other than Dr. Browne's. —See Times, July 12, 1864.

The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Remedial Uses and Action.

This INVALUABLE REMEDY produces quiet, refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions, and stimulates healthy action of the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium. Old and young may take it at all hours and times when requisite. Thousands of persons testify to its marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while medical men extol its virtues most extensively, using it in great quantities in the following diseases:—

Diseases in which it is found eminently useful—Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Colics, Coughs, Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Whooping Cough, Cramp, Hysteria, &c.

Extracts from Medical Opinions.

The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Chlorodyne.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

From A. Montgomery, Esq., late Inspector of Hospitals, Bombay.—"Chlorodyne is a most valuable remedy in Neuralgia, Asthma, and Dysentery. To it I fairly owe my restoration to health, after eighteen months' severe suffering, and when other remedies had failed."

Dr. Lowe, Medical Missionary in India, reports (Dec. 1865) that in nearly every case of Cholera in which Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne was administered the patient recovered.

Extract from Medical Times, Jan. 12, 1866.—"Chlorodyne is prescribed by scores of orthodox medical practitioners. Of course it would not thus be singularly popular did it not 'supply a want and fill a place.'"

Extract from the General Board of Health, London, as to its efficacy in Cholera.—"So strongly are we convinced of the immense value of this remedy, that we cannot too forcibly urge the necessity of adopting it in all cases."

Beware of spurious and dangerous compounds sold as CHLORODYNE, from which frequent fatal results have followed.

See leading article, Pharmaceutical Journal, Aug. 1, 1869, which states that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the inventor of Chlorodyne; that it is always right to use his preparation when Chlorodyne is ordered.

CAUTION.—None genuine without the words "Dr. J. Collis Browne" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming medical testimony accompanies each bottle.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, November 18; Agra and Madras, November 16; Calcutta, November 15.

THE great event of the week in Bombay was the arrival of Lord Northbrook from Karachi on the 14th. For several days afterwards all business remained at a standstill in that rich and loyal city. Sir P. Wodehouse and his colleagues met the Viceroy on landing, and the whole party set off for Government House in a grand procession through streets lined of course with the usual crowds. On the 15th his Lordship was for some hours engaged in receiving native chiefs and princes, among whom three of the first rank, Jaipur, Baroda, and Indore, were not to be found. In the afternoon 800 gentlemen attended the Viceroy's levée in the Town-hall; and the day's labours closed with a brilliant ball given by the Governor of Bombay. Saturday morning was devoted to business, but in the afternoon came off the grand durbar, at which his Lordship invested the Shah Jehan Begam of Bhopal and Sir John Strachey with the Order of the Star of India. Such a gathering of princes and notables was never before witnessed in Bombay. The native princes and nobles, who were to be counted by scores, blazed out in all the splendour of jewels and cloth of gold; Sir Salar Jung alone being conspicuous for the lack of ornament. The procession of Knights, each shaded by his gold cloth umbrella, and accompanied by his banner-bearer and pages, was a sight which Bombay will long remember. The Begam, who came forward veiled "almost like a bride" with a long thin veil, to receive the decorations of a Grand Commander, seems to have attracted the lion's share of interest on the part of our countrymen and women. On the evening of the 17th, Lord Northbrook attended the cathedral in state.

SIR PHILIP WODEHOUSE had also been exchanging visits with the crowd of princes and nobles waiting in Bombay to do honour to the Viceroy. Among his visitors was the intelligent Rao of Cutch, who has been winning golden opinions by his efforts to promote the education of his subjects. During his stay in Bombay the Rao visited the railway workshops at Parell and the Magdala turret ship, "astonishing those round him by the intelligence of his questions and remarks."

AFTER the formal exchange of greetings between the Viceroy and the Khan of Khelat on board the Viceregal barge at Sakkar, the Khan, the Political Agent, and Sir W. Merewether were left alone with Lord Northbrook for half-an-hour's private talk. During that time Lord Northbrook gave the Khan some friendly advice regarding his future conduct, both towards our Political Agent and his own refractory Sirdars. The interview is said to have ended to the satisfaction of all concerned. The Khan's "nazars" or presents to the Viceroy are said to have been so shabby that he apologised for their trifling value. They appear to have been quite eclipsed by the offerings of Mir Ali Morad, of Khairpur. The Khan, however, who lives in a poor country, where works of art are perhaps little known, may have contributed his share, in the shape of four horses and four camels, admitted to be "fine animals," two of them belonging to the double-humped species, and therefore rare enough in India.

LORD NORTHBROOK is said to have sanctioned the making of an "inundation canal," that is, a canal which is filled only during the overflow of the Indus, part of which work will pass through the territory of the Khan of Khelat. Its probable cost will be about £75,000, which will not take long to make good if the Khan's unruly subjects can be induced to exchange the delights of highway robbery for the toils of peaceful agriculture.

THE Viceroy's levée at Karachi was chiefly remarkable for the presence of Shir Mohammed, the old Amir of Talpur, who fought against Sir C. Napier nearly thirty years ago, and has since been decorated with the Star of India for his after services to the country of his ancient foes.

WE learn by telegram that Sir Bartle Frere had an audience of King Victor Emmanuel on the 4th of this month. His Majesty handed over to his guest a gold medal bearing his own image on one side, and begged that it might be delivered to Dr. Livingstone as a token of the king's esteem and sympathy.

WE are glad to see that the services of the Loshai Expedition are to be commemorated by the bestowal of the India Medal, with a separate clasp for "Loshai," on all who took part in that very trying campaign.

SOME alarm appears to have been awakened in the Indian Civil Service by a rumour that Lord Northbrook desires to introduce a system of confidential Reports, like that which already exists in the army. According to the Englishman however the alarm is unfounded. All that the Viceroy has done or proposed is, to call on the Chief Commissioners of non-regulation provinces for annual reports on the qualifications of Civil Officers and Military Officers in civil employ, with a view to helping him in selecting the fittest men for promotion. Hitherto it seems to have been the custom for each Viceroy on his retirement to destroy or take away with him all confidential papers bearing on the character of subordinate officers. Each new Viceroy therefore began his work with empty boxes, and any information he might require was furnished by the Secretaries of Departments. His vast patronage during the first year or so of his office thus came to be vested in the hands of his secretaries; and many an officer, who was too modest to urge his own claims, or lacked friends powerful enough to recommend them, would be left out in the cold, while the friend of a secretary was pretty sure to get on. By the new arrangement Lord Northbrook aims at doing away with a system which enables a few irresponsible advisers to take what advantage they please of their Viceroy's ignorance. That such is the real purpose of the order in question may be gathered from one special provision by which his Lordship promises to use his own discretion in notifying to the officers concerned the unfavourable nature of the reports he may have received about them. By this means a decisive check is likely to be placed on the tendency of the reporting officer to indulge his spite or his prejudices at the expense of his subordinates. With the prospect before him of having his own statements carefully tested, the Commissioner who makes a report will be impelled in some degree to weigh his words, and to consult the public interest rather than his personal likings and dislikes.

If the Madras Athenæum has not been misinformed, the punishment of an English garotter must be light indeed compared with that meted out to native criminals of the vulgarst type at Madras. Twenty-five lashes in this country is a notable event, to be carefully described in popular daily journals of the widest circulation. In Madras however it seems to be regarded as "a mild flogging." Almost every week, says the Madras journal, "in our district jails fifty lashes are administered for the pettiest offence. A man has no appetite and can't eat his food in a jail. He is reported by the warder to the Superintendent as one who is trying, by not eating, to make himself ill, and thus escape his daily work—and at once the Superintendent orders him so many lashes." The cat in short is described as "the supreme remedy" for all kinds of petty offences; and no one apparently dreams of stinting the number of strokes in accordance with English ideas of fitness or severity. Perhaps, if the punishment is so common, our countrymen in India have brought themselves to believe that the natives are "used to it," as a well known authority once remarked about the skinning of eels alive. We for our part should think that floggings thus heavily and indiscriminately administered, would hardly tend to humanise either natives or Europeans in India. It appears however that in some parts of that country the process is carried on with a little more regard for the sufferer's powers of endurance. In Bengal at any rate the cane is substituted for the cat, and no more than twenty stripes can be inflicted at one time. But perhaps the Madrassies are considered a tougher race than their neighbours in Bengal.

THE Broad Arrow protests with much force against the proposed abolition of the gun-carriage factory at Madras, as one of the most impolitic measures ever recommended by "an intelligent body of men." Of the intelligence of those who make the proposal, the less we say, the better. It must be a very peculiar sort of wisdom which would seek to concentrate into one establishment at Allahabad all the military workshops needful for the supply of a country so vast as India. Railways can do much in the way of annihilating space; but two thousand miles from Allahabad to some of the stations in Southern India mean a serious delay in the provision of a needful war-appliance, at a time perhaps of pressing need. How are the batteries that might be wanted some day for a rising in the Dakhan or Mysore to be equipped at short notice from Allahabad? Madras may have no need of a separate Commander-in-Chief with all the establishments thereto appended; but it does not follow that the centralising principle should be extended to the making of gun-carriages also. Instead of fewer factories for warlike tools and appliances, we should be glad to see more; one at least to every large province. We have not yet heard that gun-carriages can be made better or more cheaply at Fettehghar or Allahabad, than in Madras; and the last named place has hitherto been renowned for the excellence of the work it has turned out for the Ordnance Department. The notion of doing away with the Madras factory must have issued from the same brain whence came the proposal to abolish or at least cut down the Madras Army—the only reserve army we have in India.

FROM the evidence adduced at the inquest on Sir D. McLeod's body, it seems but too clear that his death was mainly owing to his own unfortunate rashness in trying to enter a train already moving at the rate of several miles an hour. At the same time the recommendation tacked on to the jury's verdict confirms the general belief that such accidents might be prevented or deprived of their worst effects by due precautions on the part of railway managers. The closing of a gate would have kept Sir Donald off the platform, and a proper footboard along the carriages would have saved him from the dreadful penalties involved in the taking of one false step.

A SENTENCE in the Times of Wednesday last appears to throw a melancholy light on the cause of Sir Donald's eagerness to catch the train, which, after all, we hear, was not going in his direction. "At the very time of his death"—says the writer of the obituary notice—"he was on his way to plead at a meeting for the extension of Christian vernacular education in the East." Had he been only a little less anxious to keep his appointment, a precious life might still have been spared to his friends and clients in both hemispheres. A strange fatality, by the way, has overtaken three of the Anglo-Indian statesmen whose names figured most prominently at the farewell banquet given to Sir D. Macleod at Lahore, in May, 1870. On New Year's day 1871 his successor Sir Henry Durand was killed by a fall from his elephant. Lord Mayo himself died in February of this year by the hand of an assassin, and on the 28th of last November a horrible railway accident carried off Sir Donald himself.

ACCORDING to a contemporary, at that same banquet Lord Napier of Magdala gave his hearers a new reading of a certain passage in Indian history. It appears that his Lordship contrasted the state of the Punjab in 1870 with what it had been "twenty years before, when Sir D. McLeod first entered it, and pursued the Afghans to Attock." We used to believe that in 1849 the pursuit of the Sikhs and Afghans after Gujrat was carried out by "the flying General," Sir Walter Gilbert, and not by the distinguished civil officer who was about to take over the Jalandhar Division from Mr. John Lawrence. But our historical guides appear to have conspired to mislead us; and we bow to the high authority of Lord Napier, who was himself an actor in the Punjab Campaign; provided always that he said what our contemporary credits him with saying.

FOR another piece of news we are indebted to the Spectator. Talking of Sir George Balfour, the candidate for Kincardineshire, that journal informs us that he "saved the Indian Treasury in 1868, and was only refused his reward because he would meddle with the home expenditure of the India Office." A captious critic might object, that Sir George could hardly have been engaged in saving the Indian Treasury when all his energies were bestowed on the task of organising a new Control Department for the English War Office. He might also question the need for saving the Indian Treasury in that particular year. Moreover it is a curious circumstance, that the officer who is said to have earned no thanks for meddling with the home expenditure of the India Office in 1868, has since been employed by the Indian Council in trying to reduce the expenditure of the Indian Government both at home and abroad. Be that as it may however, we have little doubt that if Sir G. Balfour wins his seat, the interests of sound economy, combined with a just regard for the guaranteed rights and privileges of old Indian officers, will find in him a powerful exponent in the House of Commons.

THE remains of Sir D. McLeod were interred on Thursday last at Kensal Green. It is pleasant to note that the carriage of the Duke of Edinburgh led the train of thirty carriages which followed the body.

THERE is a hitch of some kind in the working of the money order system between England and India. It seems that a good deal of money remitted from India in Post-office orders is lying unclaimed in the General Post-office, because the names and addresses of the senders have not been correctly given. The arrangements made on this side for the despatch of money orders are said to be all that could be desired. It is a pity that the Indian Post-office people have not been equally successful in carrying out their share of a great experiment devised for the general benefit. We can hardly suppose that the average of those who send money orders home from India are more dull or careless than the bulk of their correspondents in this country.

In a long and elaborate minute on the working of the Bengal Jails in 1871, Mr. G. Campbell states his reasons for selecting a judicial officer to fill the post left vacant by the early death of Dr. Mouat's successor, Dr. Fawcus. The whole question of jail discipline in Bengal wanted examining, he thought, from a judicial point of view. Too much attention had been paid to manufactures and finance, while the penal object of imprisonment, especially with regard to short-term prisoners, had been proportionally overlooked. In the lock-ups petty misdemeanants were "simply detained and fed." In the larger jails a skilful workman was at once allowed many privileges, and educated prisoners led easy lives, besides being enabled to make many underhand profits. The prisoners were not classified. The paid warders were wholly undisciplined and useless for effective control. Prisoners' labour was hired out to the outside public. Prisoners under trial were not properly separated from the rest. Medical officers had received charge of jails without reference to their special fitness. The Lieutenant-Governor on the contrary has made the district officer ultimately responsible for the management of the district jail, with power to recommend either a civil or a medical officer for the immediate charge of it. After discussing the question of profits from prison labour, Mr. Campbell concludes that the alleged profits are less than they appear, and are altogether too small to raise the question of profit above other and more important considerations, such, for example, as the inculcation of regular and industrious habits. He is for teaching prisoners "the arts most likely to be followed afterwards." A released prisoner "will not set up a complicated loom, but if he can earn four or six annas per day as a bricklayer, instead of one and a-half anna as a coolie or a thief, there is a chance that he may take to the former mode of livelihood." Looking at the pliable and placable character of most native convicts, Mr. Campbell would not have their labour made too rigidly penal and expiatory, as a rule. The bulk of them may be kept fairly disciplined on a moderate amount of labour, by means of a good system of manufactures.

With regard to the sanitary question, which he deems the "most difficult of all," Mr. Campbell declines to sacrifice everything else to the mere chance of reducing a death-rate which is still, he confesses, far from low. So many jails which ought to be healthy happen to be the reverse, while so many others remain comparatively healthy in spite of sanitary rules, that he is content to accept "a moderately excessive death-rate," with a fair amount of discipline and moderate labour for all prisoners, and "really severe punishment for a moderate proportion of them." This question of punishment indeed is, he owns, "one of the most unsolved and most unsatisfactory of modern problems," in a country where the people are strange to us, and the instruments to work with are far from trustworthy. Nevertheless "we must do the best we can," hoping for some good result in due time.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MILITARY TACTICS IN THE FIELD.—II.

WE have shown in brief what the writers of the Essays published by the Duke of Wellington think regarding the best kind of formation for infantry advancing to the attack. All of them agree in recognising loose or open-order lines of skirmishers and supports, as the only practicable substitute for the old system of feeling the way with a thin screen of skirmishers, and then advancing in close-order lines. To these proposals the new drill regulations give on the whole a formal sanction. A great step also has been taken in the right direction by the virtual breaking up of battalions into wings, and the doubling up of the old companies for tactical purposes. Practice will gradually develop further changes in the mode of handling these new formations. In time perhaps the double-company of parade will become the recognised unit of the battalion in barracks, while the leading officer of the double-company will attain to something of the power and responsibility now enjoyed by the Prussian captain. Commanders also of sub-divisions and sections will necessarily be charged with the higher duties which greater freedom in the handling of those bodies will involve; and the sergeants of a battalion must in their turn be accustomed to wield within due limits the practical command of yet smaller bodies of men. All this of course will require more careful training than ever in the preliminary drill of our foot soldiers. More, and not less attention will have to be paid to the grammar of drill, to those very movements which are no longer practicable under fire. Before soldiers are fit for manœuvring in loose order, they must still be accustomed to every sort of close formation, to step and wheel together in line or column, elbow to elbow, in closed ranks, at given words of command, as they have always done before. Perfection in these things will ensure the greatest amount of ease and precision in the more extended movements of the field, just as, in most cases,

"True ease in writing comes from art, not chance;
And those move easiest who have learned to dance."

One of the Essayists, Lieutenant Cooper King, lays noticeable stress on the "principle of extension which follows the use of small flexible units" as specially desirable for small armies such as ours. By an orderly extension of our attacking or defending lines we "gain the power of enabling small masses to act in most cases against larger ones." German experience in the late war has shown that twenty thousand men are no longer needed to defend a mile of frontage against the enemy.

If the Prussians at Saarbrücken had only about 5,000 men to the mile, at Le Mans about 3,000, and very little more at St. Quentin, it is not too much to assume that well-trained and well-officer English soldiers could be trusted to win battles under like conditions. If the great fighting qualities which nature has given them are duly supplemented by careful training, they ought to acquit themselves just as brilliantly in extended movements to the front or flank as they have hitherto done in the tactics which they borrowed from Frederick the Great. The essence of all fighting is in fact exceedingly simple. To turn or force the enemy's position, and to prevent him from doing the same thing to yours, sums up the whole of a commander's duty in the field. In face of the new firearms, flanking movements will more than ever be preferred to front attacks; and in making or meeting such movements the old English steadiness, discipline, pluck, and self-reliance will hardly fail against the old odds, provided that to these virtues be added the utmost possible freedom in the use of the soldier's brains, limbs, and bodily senses.

With regard to the various uses of cavalry in the future, Captain Russell, as a cavalry officer, has much to say that is well worth hearing. Whatever cavalry could fairly be expected to do before, they are quite as able, he holds, to do still. Broken infantry, guns limbered up, shaken lines, or unbroken cavalry, will henceforth be as open as ever to a cavalry attack. For all such purposes the cavalry of an army corps should be massed together, and a second line should move in support of the first. They should advance in some kind of compact formation, with a few scouts in front, but no skirmishers, the use of horsemen in open order being merely "a waste of horse power." It is a mistake to suppose that heavy cavalry have had their day. Trautenau, Nachod, Königgratz, and Rezonville bore witness to the advantage enjoyed under certain conditions by heavy men on big horses over small horses and light men. In modern warfare the making and repelling of flank attacks will enter largely into the horse-soldier's duties. For that end Captain Russell would train him to fight, like the old original dragoon, on foot as well as on horseback, so that cavalry might "establish a foot-hold either for offence or defence in any spot, until the infantry could follow and support them." This indeed was the great lesson taught in the last days of the American War, by the brilliant way in which Sheridan's dismounted troopers held fast the retreating Lee until Grant brought up his infantry to their support. Yet, strange to say, it was a lesson which the Prussians failed to learn, until circumstances at last compelled them to raise two regiments of mounted gendarmes, and to send out bodies of infantry in waggons.

Instead of using cavalry for such a purpose, Sir Garnet Wolseley agrees with Lieutenant Maurice in advising the employment of mounted infantry, "men having the mobility of cavalry and the fighting efficiency of good infantry skirmishers." Sir Garnet might have enforced his argument by reference to the success with which Sir C. Napier improvised bodies of mounted infantry during his Trakki raid, and to the services of the Sindh Camel Corps in Sir Hugh Rose's Central Indian Campaign. Had some of Gilbert's infantry been thus mounted during his famous march to Attok, the flying Afghans might have been brought to bay before they crossed the Indus. The question between mounted infantry and cavalry trained to fight at need on foot is one which might best be settled on pecuniary grounds; but the need for settling it one way or the other seems to us beyond all question.

Equally manifest to our thinking is the usefulness of the mitrailleuse for defensive purposes, if for nothing else. On this point Sir Garnet Wolseley, for one, speaks with just confidence. As a substitute for artillery, the mitrailleuse, planted in batteries after the fashion adopted by the French in the late war, appears to have been a failure; but properly managed and placed singly here and there under cover, it should hold its own against infantry and even guns to a distance of at least 1,500 yards. "If the Russians at Alma"—says Sir G. Wolseley—"had had, say, ten Gatling guns distributed along their front, the allies could not have forced the position as they did." For preventing the passage of a fordable river, for checking a flank movement, guarding a lane, or filling gaps in a weak line of infantry, such a weapon ought to be of great service. In Indian warfare, especially among the hills on the frontier, it would surely prove invaluable in the place, or in aid of the usual mountain guns.

At a range of more than a thousand or twelve hundred yards of course nothing will beat artillery fire for general destructiveness. Shrapnel and other shells have an unpleasant way of searching out cover which bullets are wont to spare. In meeting an attack, artillery fire must always be the mainstay of the defending force, threatening death or damage to everything that stands or moves within its range. "No object," says Lieutenant King, an artillery officer, "would be gained by massing the guns. The more scattered they are, the safer they will be." On this point he is at one with Sir G. Wolseley, who heartily scouts "the old superstition against ever posting one single gun in any position," however effective for purposes of attack or defence. Common sense, indeed, as well as soldierly experience would indicate the policy of scattering instead of massing guns, in order to deal the heaviest possible blows at the least possible cost to your own side. For this end Lieutenant King would range most of the light field guns on either flank, so as to concentrate their fire at need on any given point, unhampered by the advance of infantry from the centre of their line.

THE HINDUSTANI ABROAD.—V.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Since last I write, have been out of town in country seat, because invitation arrived from rural squire. Local name cannot publish from delicacy. But permission is giving that one two impressions may send of visit for your wide extended circulating journal. It was best to go, because natives of India stop in this great cockney metropolis too much, and never can see real European up-country bit of life in the tight little British Island. Rain drizzle all first day that arrive, and fog so much that cannot see out of window. So billiards always I am playing with host. Next day better, am seeing village and farm. One thing very bad! Unclean animals are swarming like lice in a coolie's blanket! English why will keep? Must see on me! daun in India vile diabolical manners of animal? Besides too hideous face got, long nasty nose, evil envious eyes, bad smell, no hair on back, and dirt always eating with greedy noise. How can European eat and stomach not be sick with nausea? This mystery to me! Female Ryot in village make curious curtsy salaam by first pretending sit down, then all at once change mind and bob up again! Male Ryot pull hard his hair, if old and bald do not know what he do! Not poor. How can talk of agricultural distress? Gets twenty eight rupees a month, poor helpless Indian Ryot only four rupees!! This is not according to Cocker. Country very verdant green, and innumerable trees and jungle. Beautiful bulls and stallions are grazing in the midst, but there are no pariah dogs anywhere in mortal vision! And always fog, fog, fog, fog.

When return to mansion then it is proper to dress smart for dinner. Soon are seated round hospitable mahogany board. Then eating and drinking as much as can hold. When stomach is plenty full, then God forbid, if one was to do same as in India, namely, look hard at host, make copious noisy eructations in stomach, and say "thanks." This not fashionable only shocking in this country. Dinner nearly over when waiter poke under nose white-coloured pudding. The Devil tempted me to take some and put a large spoonful in mouth. No sooner than I am dying with pain and think I am poisoned! I am grinning in horse collars, cannot help. But everyone is bursting into guffaw! One gentleman say, "never mind, it is only ice pudding." To Hell with ice pudding, I am repeating inside me.

After dinner a nightingale-voiced lady is singing songs on piano very melodious and shrill, but very glad when done, because little too much noise for drums in ear. Soon it is time to sleep with Morpheus, and then all go to rosy slumber, because nearly Sunday morning. Next day go to village church with Squire. Plenty clodhopping rustics and lusty plough boys get in free seats, soon snoring away same as in bed. Infant schoolboys very troublesome, will not be quiet or obey schoolmaster. Farmers do not listen, but now and then blow nose very hard, and stare at roof, same as if all time thinking of pig. Padrè make too much monotonous noise like Tom Tom, so Squire have comfortable nap in sermon. Nobody kneel when offer prayer. I am thinking this only mockery religion. What good say prayers this way? These boorish people in country seem only to fill belly and sleep. Missionary more useful here than in Hindostan, because no caste got; only ignorant and want to learn. Plenty bad Bishops must live in this country, perhaps this the reason that the Padrè in St. George's-hall call out in voice of thunder, "Disestablish him."—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

REVENUE SETTLEMENTS.

The Englishman asserts that in no one instance that it is aware of is the District Collector entrusted with the work of supervising the settlement operations in his own district, although he may have had years of the general and special experience necessary for doing so with effect. The duty is invariably and absolutely made over to young gentlemen averaging some ten years' standing, who have a direct interest in getting over the work of one district as quickly as they can, in order that they may obtain an increase of pay in their own department, and employment of the same kind in another district. Thus is engendered a hard mechanical spirit; and, with the best intentions doubtless, the Settlement Officers are led to put the cart before the horse by regarding the pleasure of Government first, and the good of the people afterwards. This dangerous state of things has not been brought about without due warning. Here is an extract from a minute by Sir J. Lawrence, as Viceroy, dated March 5, 1864, which was reprinted at the Allahabad Government Press three years ago, and can hardly be considered as obsolete or fallen into abeyance:—"As a rule, the assessment of a district can be done in a more leisurely manner if it be made by the Collector than if it be made by a separate Settlement Officer, and there are often advantages in this work being done gradually. If a Collector spread the work over two or more years, it is of less moment; but a Settlement Officer, being a separate and special officer, must needs show considerable results in each year; and this may sometimes lead to the work being done too rapidly." In another part of the same paper the Viceroy had said that he fully concurred with the Lieutenant-Governor in thinking that this agency should be preferred to any other, "wherever the District Officers are competent for this particular work, or may be able to afford the time requisite for it. . . . It were better to avoid appointing junior officers to the important office of Settlement Officer." It is certainly startling to find that these weighty directions have been so soon and so completely set aside; and we can only trust that the Government of India has received satisfactory explanations on the subject.

INDIANS AT HOME.

The Englishman remarks that we are not allowed, here in India, to forget how little our friends know about this country and the habits and customs of Anglo-Indians and natives. Almost every mail brings some new illustration of the deplorable ignorance of our countrymen on the simplest matters connected with our life here. The latest instance which has come to our notice is so excessively amusing that we give it to our readers. It comes to us through Madras, from which place one P. Venkatakrishnama Naidu, the cotton-broker of a local mercantile firm, journeyed to England, accompanied by a friend. No sooner had these distinguished individuals set foot on English ground, than they found themselves centres of attraction and stars of the first magnitude. After "doing" the London season, our friends have recently been making a tour in the provinces, and have succeeded in turning the heads of our countrymen to no small extent. The triumphal progress has just culminated in an exchange of salutations with her Majesty the Queen, who, while halting at Ballater station on the occasion of her recent journey from Balmoral to Dunrobin, bowed as she crossed the railway platform to "Mr. Pothum Chetty Vencatachella Chetty and Mr. P. Venkatakrishnama Naidu, two gentlemen from Madras, who were attired in native costume, and were positively ablaze with jewels and brilliants." We are quoting from an Aberdeen paper, which goes on to add: "These two gentlemen, we understand, came all the way from London to obtain a sight of her Majesty, and they were very greatly delighted at the condescension of their Queen," to whom they in turn "made a very low obeisance." On the arrival at Aberdeen of the Royal train, into which the Madras broker and his friend had followed her Majesty, "Earl Granville, &c., Mr. P. Venkatakrishnama Naidu, and Mr. Pothum Chetty Vencatachella Chetty,"—we are quoting the words used by the Aberdeen journalist,— "left the train, and came forward to the Royal carriage." What they did then history telleth not, but in the evening a banquet was given in Aberdeen, at which were present "the Earl of Aberdeen, &c., Mr. Pothum Chetty Vencatachella Chetty, P. Venkatakrishnama Naidu, &c.," and after various toasts had been done justice to, the chairman rose and made the following speech:—"He thought that the next toast which he had to propose would be well received. They had the honour of having with them to-day two gentlemen from the Presidency of Madras. (Applause.) They were made heartily welcome, and they would wish them all prosperity and happiness in their visit to this country. (Applause.) We wish them to leave us, of course, with as good an impression as possible. He was not sure if he could pronounce their names properly, but he would ask them to drink to the health of Mr. Chetty and Mr. Naidu. (Applause.)" It has seldom been our fortune to read anything so ludicrous as this. Who this clever chairman was we do not gather from the Madras Mail, which quotes the Aberdeen journal; nor does it matter. But those of our readers who are not acquainted with Tamil proper names will understand the absurdity of proposing the health of "Mr. Chetty" and "Mr. Naidu" when we tell them that it would be no less amusing to propose the health of "Mr. Bahador" or "Mr. Khan," or for natives of this country to toast "Mr. Esquire," or "Mr. Kt.," or "Mr. Junior."

THE ACCUMULATION OF SILVER IN INDIA.

The Englishman, without going into the results of an increased supply of silver on prices, would confine itself to the simple issue as to whether that metal has or has not, to any great extent, accumulated in India. Now the facts on this head are briefly these. The exports of India greatly exceed her imports. For every ten rupees worth of her products which India sells to foreign nations she will only take payment of about six rupees in foreign merchandise, and requires the remaining four rupees to be paid to her in silver. The proportion varies, but the above understates rather than overstates it. Thus in 1862 the imports of merchandise were 22½ millions sterling, against 47½ of exports; in 1865 the imports were only 28 millions, against 68 millions of exports; and whenever trade is brisk the disproportion is always at its highest. In 1870 the imports stood at less than 33 millions sterling, against 52½ millions of exports. The balance of trade, which is thus strongly in favour of India, has to be adjusted partly by payments of interest upon the Indian debt in England, and partly by direct importations of treasure from the foreign purchasers of Indian merchandise. During the four years ending in 1866, the importations of bullion averaged, as near as may be, twenty-three millions sterling per annum. This, however, was a period of extraordinary mercantile activity, and during the four succeeding years, 1867-70, the importation of bullion amounted to little more than one-half that sum, or 12½ millions sterling a-year. Putting, therefore, the two periods of unusual prosperity and the subsequent depression together, we find a total importation of one hundred and forty-five millions sterling during the eight years ending in 1870. This represents an increase to the stock of precious metals in the country of no less than eighteen millions sterling per annum. During the same period the export of treasure has seldom touched 1½ millions a-year, and only twice exceeded two millions. The average is about 1½ millions, leaving a total decrease of 130 millions sterling to the stock of silver in India, or at the rate of more than 16 millions a-year. It is difficult at first sight to realise the effect of so vast a mass of bullion suddenly thrust into a country. But we may form some idea of the practical result by considering the average increase which it represents in the hoarded wealth of each family. Assuming the population of British India at 175 millions, and five persons to each family, we get a total of 35 million households. Now, supposing that not one of these households had a single rupee in its possession in 1863, the importations of treasure during the following eight years would give to each one of the 35 millions of families a hoard of no less than thirty-seven rupees a piece in 1870. That is to say, the importations of treasure, within eight years, would make each family in India the possessor of an accumulation of silver equal to a whole year's income for a labouring man at the commencement of the period. This fact speaks for itself. But there are other facts which speak even more strongly. Within eight years enough bullion has been accumulated in India to discharge the whole revenue of the Empire for two-and-a-half years to come, and a great deal more than enough to pay off the whole public debt which has grown up during a century and a-half of conquest and war.

THE CAMP OF EXERCISE.—It is said that the final decision as to holding the Camp of Exercise will not be arrived at until the Commander-in-Chief has personally visited every station in the Punjab where the troops have suffered from cholera. He has just paid visits to Jallandar, Amritsar, and Lahore.

Bengal.

JABALPUR.—A contemporary informs us that the Jabalpur branch of the Bank of Bengal is to be closed as soon as the necessary arrangements for transferring the Government business to the Treasury are completed.

THE VICEROY.—We are able to state on good authority that Lord Northbrook has not had an attack of dengue, as is generally reported. His Lordship suffered for one day from a slight fever, sufficient to prevent him riding through a half-flooded country to Jacobabad, as mentioned in our paper of Friday last.—Englishman.

COLONEL HAUGHTON.—The Secretary of State for India has authorised the continuance of Colonel Haughton as Commissioner of the Kuch Behar Division after he has attained the age of fifty-five years. He is to hold the office until he succeeds to the allowances of a colonel of the staff corps in February, 1875. The ground of the favour is his peculiar knowledge of the "light" division of Kuch Behar, which will ere long be broken up.

MILITARY.—We understand that an officer has been directed by the Commander-in-Chief to devote his time for the next four or five months to the compilation of the services of all officers in the army. He will be located at Simla, where he will be assisted with information from the Adjutant General's office.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has authorised the formation at Umballa of a class with the view of qualifying officers as instructors in gymnastics. The class will be limited to six in number, and will be formed on the 15th of November, and the course will terminate on the 15th April.

DEATH OF DR. COULTER.—With most sincere and heartfelt regret we notice the death, in Cachar, of Dr. Coulter. It would be superfluous to add any expression of feeling beyond what has already found vent where he was so well-known and so highly respected. After a short illness he passed away from among those who loved him well and will long feel his loss. His remains were followed to the grave by one hundred and nine persons, the largest funeral gathering ever known in Cachar. The scene at the grave, we learn from a private source, was most distressing. Not one presens but felt he had lost a friend who would long hold a place in his memory.—Bengal Times, Nov. 2.

THE TIBET ROAD.—We are glad to hear that there are some hopes that the great road leading from Kalka to the Thibetan frontier is likely at length to be completed. The operations on the road were stopped by the occurrence of the mutiny in 1857; they were recommenced about 1860; and again stopped two years ago from want of funds. There are but five stages to be completed to reach the borders of China. When these are finished there will be a road sufficiently wide for laden animals of all descriptions to go the whole way on an almost level road from the plains through the hills into China, a distance of over three hundred miles. And orders for the completion of these last five stages have been given by Lord Northbrook, such work to be done during the next working season of 1873.—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 5.

PUBLIC WORKS BLUNDERS.—Another letter from Colonel Tyrrell, the quondam executive engineer in the Central Provinces in the days when Mr. Temple reigned at Nagpore, has just been published. He does not appear to care about the elaborate accounts referred to by his critics, according to which little more was spent on the whole Raepore road than the sum alleged by Colonel Tyrrell to have been misappropriated in connection with it. He disputes the very foundation of the figured statement; and though it is hard to say whence came the funds out of which, as he says, the public were swindled, he still avers that thousands of pounds drawn on in the name of that road never went on to it in any shape. It is now too late to get to the bottom of that question; but there can be no doubt that there is great force in the general proposition laid down by Colonel Tyrrell—that too elaborate accounts are the bane of our public works system. The thundering Government resolution on the Saugor Barracks comes in time to add power to the elbow of the retired engineer who writes from the peaceful neighbourhood of Foyle Park. If we mistake not, one of the superior officers aimed at by Colonel Tyrrell is hit by this very resolution.—Times of India.

TRANSFORMATION OF SPENCE'S HOTEL.—The Indian Daily News in a recent issue stated that the Government of India, after negotiating for some time past for the buildings known as Spence's in Calcutta, had purchased them for the trifling consideration of seven lakhs of rupees, with an additional seventy thousand as compensation to Mr. Linton, the present lessee, for vacating the buildings before the expiration of the lease, which had three years to run. The ex-hotel will be converted into Government offices, and within its precincts the Foreign Department, the Home Office, the Military Department and the Agricultural Department will be located. By this transaction the Calcutta officials are saved all the trouble and bother of estimates and plans embodying the cost and style of a new building such as would be requisite for the accommodation of the above-named offices. The consideration of securing a ready-made office appears to have overbalanced all others in the estimation of the Government of India; but were the question of expenditure gone into, unless we err considerably, it would be found that pukka built (in the Calcutta sense of the term) offices for the accommodation of these departments might have been created at considerably less expense. Calcutta public buildings generally are not remarkable either for their elegance externally or their substantiality, and in adding Spence's to the list, the Government of India have not contemplated either the one or the other consideration. The buildings will afford ample, perhaps too ample accommodation for the departments which are to occupy them, and the situation is in many respects a desirable one; but these facts can hardly palliate an expenditure of nearly eight lakhs of rupees when the object in view might have been attained, we have every reason to believe, for a considerably less sum.—Times of India.

PUNJAB LOAVES AND FISHES.—A singularly ill-advised memorial has been drawn up by some civilians in the North-West Provinces, and has been circulated for signature among their brethren in the Punjab. Its object is to enable civilians in the neighbouring province to come in for the good things in the Punjab, which will be going in a few years. This happy consummation will be caused by the retirement of a considerable number of military men, on, we hope, liberal pensions. The introduction, however, of the N.W.P. outsiders will not only disappoint the expectations of the senior Punjab civilians, but create another block in the promotion of our junior officers. Several men have been brought here from the N.W.P., and we have returned the compliment by sending them those we could spare, but the time has passed when a grievance can be made by any service out of the fact that the "loot of to-day is not as the loot of yesterday." The necessities of good Government are above class interests. The N.W.P. will not only not come in for the "loaves and fishes" of the Punjab, but the whole service will be disappointed in their expectation of monopolising "appointments in the Departments of Education, Forests, Jails, Post-Office, Cantonment Magistracies," and even "the post of Superintendent of the Government Press," which the North-West petitioners would like. The tendency of things is to entrust departments to those who have been especially trained in and for them. We wonder that the N.W. civilians have made no claims to the Superintendence of Hospitals, Railways, Telegraphs and, indeed, of every thing that is well paid. At any rate, we hope that no Punjab civilian will be weak enough to sign the rashly-worded memorial of the N.W.P. Even from a purely C.S. point of view it does not go far enough as regards what the whole service has a claim to, and only relieves one division of it at the expense of another.—Punjab Times.

KABUL.—Amongst the items of news from Kábul, published by the Agra paper, we find that the Amír has announced to Sardár Yákub Khán his intention of visiting Herát next year, as he is very dissatisfied with the amount of taxes collected. Sardár Háfatulla Khán has been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Amír's army, in the place of General Feramuz Khán. The new cavalry regiments have been reported as proficient in English drill, and are to be supplied with their new uniform and accoutrements at once. The Governor of Kandahár has imposed an income-tax of five per cent. until the sum of five lakhs is raised.—The Amír of Kábul is determined, if possible, to put a stop to drunkenness, which is very prevalent amongst the nobility as well as the poorer classes. A contemporary says that he has issued an order that drunkenness would be most severely punished, especially amongst the nobility, who ought, as a rule, to set a good example to the lower classes. A few days after this mandate had been issued, the son of Sardár Mír Afzal Khán invited his friends to a party at his house, at which wine was freely drunk, so much so as to intoxicate himself and his guests, which ended in a disturbance. The Amír, on hearing this, was highly displeased, and inflicted a fine of a lakh of rupees on the young Sardár and his guests, twenty-five in number; failing payment, they were to be imprisoned till the fine was liquidated. As the fine was not paid, the young Sardár and his friends are undergoing imprisonment. The relatives of the Sardár and his father sought the Amír's clemency, which was denied. The Amír of Kábul appears to be constantly changing his commander-in-chief. Last week a new one was appointed, and now the correspondent of the Delhi Gazette informs us that Nazir Hussain Khán, deputy commander-in-chief, has been appointed, and that the Amír buckled a handsome sword round his waist at a parade of the troops as a symbol of his appointment. Subsequently the new commander-in-chief gave a feast to the whole of the troops in Kábul, and the city was illuminated in his honour.

DANGER OF PERSONALITIES.—In his memoirs contributed to the Times of India, Mr. Stocquer gives the following advice:—Glancing over the last files of Indian papers I observe that some correspondent is very desirous of the publication of an Indian Funch. In case any one should be rash enough to venture upon such an affair, I would take the liberty, on the strength of some painful experience in Calcutta, to say to him, as the London Punch observed "to persons about to marry,"—"Don't!" When Lord Auckland was Governor-General, and the Government House clique were subjects of idle gossip, it was proposed by three of my staff—Captain McNaghten, James Hume, a barrister, (and afterwards chief magistrate), and Mr. Cobb Harry, a merchant, to get up a comic satirical publication and call it Flibbutigibbet. I foolishly yielded to the suggestion. The thing was witty and clever, but quite unnecessary and very offensive. We had no animosities, public or personal, to gratify, not one of us, had an enemy; the whole affair was simply conceived in a spirit of fun. But it wounded many susceptibilities. From the Governor-General and his family, Flib proceeded to attack the Commander-in-Chief, the Judges, and the principal civilians for their little personal failings or peculiarities, and then went a step lower and grasped the entire society of the town. The sale was enormous and the secret of the authorship was well preserved. But what was fun to us was death to the people at whom we threw stones. Society rose against the offenders, and being suspected we were all placed under a ban. The Government House list knew us not. To Harry and myself this was no trial, for neither of us went there much, excepting on business; but the wives of Hume and McNaghten were shocked at the exclusion, and one of them actually rushed to the Big House, and on her knees besought Miss Eden (Lord Auckland's sister) to revoke the decree of exclusion. Qui s'exerce s'accuse. Up to that time we were merely supposed to be the criminals, now the conspirators became known, so I dropped the publication like a hot potato. I had made money, but lost prestige, and what was worse had given much annoyance to many worthy people. Such must ever be the case with personal publications. The public acts of public men are fair game; when the press goes beyond them it forfeits its claims to respect, and minimises its utility. The society of India is so entirely based on mutual dependence, and is so very limited (compared to that of England) that references to the oddities and peculiarities of individuals are sure to give pain and create annoyance. Such publications as an Indian Punch are, therefore, to be earnestly deprecated. I hope the impertinence of my observation will be forgiven as the well-meant counsel of a repentant old sinner.

STATION TALK.

BANGALORE, Oct. 31.—The all-engrossing topic for the past week has been the court-martial on Private Roddy, the murderer of Corporal Allen, of the 1-21st, which closed yesterday. Since he delivered his defence, which was a very able one, and lasted over an hour and a half, the tide of public opinion has begun to run in his favour. All the witnesses for the prosecution deposed to the prisoner having deliberately fired at the corporal, and the medical testimony showed, that though the deceased was suffering from ulceration of the scalp, the immediate cause of his death was the effects of the gunshot wound. The prisoner in his defence, supported in the main points by evidence, stated that the deceased had constituted himself the bane of his life by availing himself of every opportunity of annoying, insulting, and bullying him. Prisoner had returned late from the theatre on the night of the murder in a state of intoxication, and anxious to escape from the taunts of his tormentor, bethought himself of firing off his loaded rifle into the roof of the barrack-room, which would have, of course, resulted in his being confined. The "fatal" thought then struck him of letting Corporal Allen "see fire," and, with the intention of discharging his rifle, just over the former, he endeavoured to wake him. Through mere accident the piece went off, causing the ultimate death of one who had certainly offered Roddy extreme provocation, and who, on his death-bed passed this remark, "I wish to God I would die, just to have Roddy hung." The decision of the court-martial will of course not be known yet awhile. Another court-martial was held yesterday to try Private Crowther, of the 1-21st, for flinging his helmet at his Colonel and grossly insulting him. The charge was fully proved against him. The prisoner's defence was "extreme provocation." A rumour is fast gaining ground; that the 1-21st will be ordered to Secunderabad shortly. The B Battalion D Brigade R.H.A., which arrived in Bangalore on the 25th December, 1871, leaves for England via Bombay on or about the 8th proximo, and the G 20th R. A., which arrived on the 31st October, 1869, leaves for Kemptee on the 11th proximo, marching the whole distance. The 23rd L. I. has arrived from Quilon, relieving the 39th N.I., ordered to Maulmain. The troops in garrison paraded before Major General A. Borton, C.B., commanding the Mysore division of the army, on the morning of the 25th instant.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

THE ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.—The Madras Government has telegraphed direct to the Secretary of State, requesting that no final decision may be given as to the removal of the Madras Ordnance Departments until the views of the local Government have been submitted.

BELGAUM.—The appointment of H. E. the Commander-in-Chief's nephew to the Brigade Majorship of Belgaum has, we have reason to believe, given rise to an almost general expression of discontent in military circles in this presidency. An uncomfortable impression prevails that the appointment is a job. Men who have seen service and who have passed the Staff College were at hand, while the fortunate young nominee possesses neither of these claims to responsible office.—Madras Paper.

THE GOVERNOR OF MADRAS.—Lord and Lady Hobart and suite returned to Madras by special train at 6.15 p.m. on Saturday, November 9. They left Ootacamund on the 4th, and broke the journey at Coonoor for a day or two, visiting the Government plantations at that station. H.E. made a point of seeing all that was to be seen at Coimbatore, the next resting-place, and Lady Hobart held a reception there, which was numerously attended. The jails and schools underwent the inspection of H.E. and Lady Hobart respectively, and the mild excitement will satisfy Coimbatore for at least six months to come.

FORESTS.—We understand that Mr. C. F. Nepean, Assistant Conservator of Forests, has been deputed to Sittang and Tonghoo to make inquiries into the reported unauthorised felling of teak trees and other disputes there. A better selection than this experienced officer it would be perhaps hard to find in the province, but we trust that the opening out of his new teak plantation at Magayee on the Promie Road will not be neglected in his absence, and that after a few weeks he may be again allowed to continue the plantation work which in the last few years he has conducted with such success.

MR. ARBUTHNOT.—The Hon. A. J. Arbuthnot did not come down to Madras on Saturday week with H.E. the Governor, he having gone on, the Madras Athenaeum learns, to Bombay, via Bepore, en route to England. It is probable the honourable gentleman will make a short stay in Bombay, as he will arrive there about the time of Lord Northbrook's visit to that place. The sudden departure of Mr. Arbuthnot has quite upset the little arrangements of the native gentlemen who intended presenting him with an address, &c., before he left India. Mr. Arbuthnot's portrait, which was taken by Mr. Fonseca, the artist on the Mount-road, is, we believe, nearly ready, and is a capital likeness.

CINCHONA.—Mr. W. G. McIvor, Superintendent Government Cinchona Plantations, reports that our Cinchona plantations are now capable of yielding much more bark than is required by the Government Quinologist for the manufacture of amorphous quinine. The time has now arrived when considerable harvests of bark may be taken, and he suggests that from 20,000 to 25,000 lbs. of bark may be prepared during the next dry season (November to March), and forwarded to Europe for sale in the open market. The Governor in Council has approved this proposal, and from 20,000 to 25,000 lbs. of Cinchona bark will accordingly be sent to the Home Government for sale.—Madras Mail, Nov. 5.

THE OCCULTATION OF VENUS.—This extremely beautiful astronomical phenomenon was seen at Madras last evening under very favourable circumstances. The sky was perfectly clear, and no sooner had the sun set than "Venus, the bright star of love," was seen shining brightly over the new moon. At this time no other star was to be seen, Venus alone being bright enough to eclipse the twilight. The new moon surmounted by Venus looked like some jewel of marvellous beauty—a gleaming diamond surmounting a crescent of frosted silver. Venus and the moon were travelling in the same direction, and it was the superior pace of the planet that was to cause its eclipse behind the moon. As the star neared the darkened disc of the moon the shape of the latter became distinctly apparent. Soon the brilliance of the star began to pale as part of it passed behind the dark body of the moon. Gradually the brightness of Venus became less and less, until suddenly the remaining brilliance was extinguished as suddenly as that of an exploded rocket. As soon as the star had disappeared behind the moon the darkened disc of the latter became distinctly visible, thrown out into strong relief by the illumination of Venus behind it. People in some parts of the presidency would see Venus, the beautiful, reappear in undiminished glory, but we at Madras did not see the reappearance, as the moon had set by the time that event occurred. Less grand than an eclipse of the sun, this phenomenon was perhaps more beautiful, especially as it could be seen to perfection by the naked eye.—Madras Times, Nov. 4.

THE PROPOSED REMOVAL OF THE MADRAS GUN CARRIAGE FACTORY.—We are glad to hear that preparations are being made for something in the shape of a public demonstration against the proposed removal of the Gun Carriage Factory from Madras. The credit of initiating the movement in this form belongs, we believe, to the Chamber of Commerce, and we have no doubt its efforts to protect Madras against a serious danger will meet with the warm support of all other public bodies. There is reason for believing that the scheme of spoliation so cleverly managed by the Bengal intriguers has not received the sanction of the Secretary of State, and there seems to be a good chance of a prompt protest from Madras obtaining a favourable consideration. General Norman's scheme has already been several times vetoed, and the way in which it has been gone about this time seems to indicate a desire on the part of those concerned to commit the Government of India in such a way that the Duke of Argyll will not be able to stop the thing when it comes to his knowledge. It will be for us to give his Grace timely notice of what is going on, and to bring before him forcibly the financial and military considerations that stamp the scheme as mischievous. It is impossible to believe that any unprejudiced person could be brought to think it better for the State that a factory now in perfect working order, with plenty of work which it can perform with great economy, should be removed 1,600 miles away from its work. One would suppose from what is being done that some great economy was to be effected by removing the Gun Carriage Factory to Futteghur; but what is the fact? The fact is that a gun-carriage manufactured at Madras costs Rs. 170 less than one of the same size and quality made at Futteghur. Add to this the enormous cost of transport which the removal of the factory would necessitate, and the outrage upon the budget will be apparent. In their present humour, the Government of India seem rather anxious than otherwise to incur large bills for transportation of military stores by railway, with the view of making the railway accounts look better, and the military accounts look worse; but this trick of robbing Peter to pay Paul will hardly hoodwink either the public or the home authorities. The scheme that has been brought to the knowledge of the public in time for effective protest is one calculated to confer no single benefit on the State, while it is well calculated to injure Madras and to endanger the Empire.—Madras Times, Nov. 2.

THE VICEREGAL PROGRESS.

THE VICEROY IN SIND.

KURRACHEE, Nov. 9.—On Thursday, the 7th inst., the citizens of Haidarabad were all in excitement, for the Viceroy was expected to arrive in the afternoon, and long before the appointed hour large numbers of people, decked out in their holiday attire, crowded Giddoo Bunder to welcome his Excellency; but they were doomed to be disappointed, for in the evening intimation was received that the Governor-General's barge had anchored at Jam Shora, about five miles distant from Haidarabad, and that his Excellency and party purposed passing the night there. Early yesterday morning Lord Northbrook, accompanied by Sir William Merewether and Staff, rode to Meeanee, the scene of the great victory achieved by our troops under Sir Charles Napier in 1843. His Excellency reached the place at about half-past eight o'clock, and was received by Colonel Phillips, the Collector; Captain Brown, District Superintendent of Police; and Mr. Paroomull Khoobchand, Deputy Collector. After partaking of a little refreshment, his Lordship went all over the ground on which the great battle was fought, inspected the monument which has been erected over the remains of the British who fell in it, and then drove into Haidarabad, reaching Giddoo Bunder at half-past ten o'clock, just in time for breakfast. After three P.M. the Municipal Commissioners waited on the Viceroy and presented an address. His Excellency delivered a neat little speech in reply, in which he took the opportunity of expressing the gratification he felt at the great improvement which the natives of the city had made in education—especially in female education. At a quarter past three o'clock the Viceroy landed with Sir William Merewether and General Addison on his left, and a guard of honour of the 2nd Belooch Regiment, under the command of Captain Browne, received his Excellency with a royal salute. His Excellency then stepped into a carriage with Sir William Merewether and Colonel Phillips, and, preceded by eight men of the mounted police and escorted by a body of artillerymen, drove through a triumphal arch to the church. Thence the Viceregal party proceeded towards the barracks, and then visited the tombs of the late Meers Kurram Ali, Noor Mahomed, and Nusseer Khan. The tomb over the remains of the first-named is a most handsome quadrangular building, surmounted by a dome, and is well worth a visit. From the tombs his Excellency went to the jail, expressed his satisfaction at all the arrangements therein, and entered his name in the visitors' book. He then visited the native schools, the fortress containing the residence of the Ameers and the Arsenal; after which his Excellency drove to the Cutcherry, where he took some refreshment, and then returned to his barge at the bund. Early this morning his Excellency visited Kotree, and at half-past nine o'clock entered the special train which conveyed him to Kurrachee. The Viceroy reached Kurrachee a little after twelve, and was received on the railway platform at the Frere Station, which was beautifully decorated by the civil and military officers of the station and a large number of Ameers. His Lordship was plainly dressed, and bowed to everyone most cordially, shaking hands with several native gentlemen who had assembled on the platform. A guard of honour of one hundred rank and file, with a proportion of non-commissioned officers, in full dress, under the command of a European officer, from the 1st Belooch Regiment, received the Viceroy with a Royal salute as his Excellency proceeded towards the carriage which was in readiness, the band playing the National Anthem. A party of Sind Horse escorted his Lordship to Government House, where a guard of honour of the 66th Regiment, with Queen's colours and band, paid his Excellency the usual honours on arrival, the B battery 9th brigade Royal Artillery, which was drawn up on the ground to the west of Government House facing the south, firing a Royal salute the moment the Viceroy's carriage came in sight. At a quarter to four this afternoon, according to previous notice, the principal Ameers of Sind were received by the Viceroy, and, punctual to the hour, his Excellency, escorted by a party of Sind Horse and attended by Sir William Merewether and his staff, arrived at Frere-hall under the usual salute. The Ameers, amongst whom were their Highnesses Hoossain Ali and Hussun Ali, and Sher Mahomed Khan, who fought against us in Dubba, were received in the banquetting room of the hall, and at four o'clock the Viceroy adjourned to the audience hall to hold a levée. About 150 persons, European and native, were received by the Viceroy, and amongst the latter were Shet Naomul, C.S.I., and the old Adjutant of Kurrachi police—this last individual a well-known and regular attendant at every annual ball given by successive Commissioners in Sind for many years past. At the conclusion of the levée another salute was fired and the Viceroy and suite left in the same way they arrived. In the evening his Excellency drove through the camp with Sir William Merewether, and then to Clifton, where he spent nearly half-an-hour enjoying the sea breeze. To-night his Lordship will be entertained at the dinner by the Commissioner.—Times of India Correspondent.

THE VICEROY AT BOMBAY.

Since Thursday last Bombay has held high holiday in honour of the Viceroy's visit. Business, comparatively speaking, has been suspended, in fact the public offices, and those of most of the banks and large mercantile firms have been closed for three days, in accordance with a Government notification to that effect. Early in the week the note of preparation for the forthcoming visit was sounded. Rajahs and native potentates of all grades commenced to arrive by special trains, many taking up their residences in spacious bungalows at Malabar Hill and elsewhere, which had been rented for them during their stay in Bombay at almost fabulous prices. Guards of honour marched incessantly from and to Government House, Parell, where his Excellency the Governor received the visits of the illustrious chiefs, and morning, noon, and night salutes boomed forth from a saluting battery posted on the Esplanade, announcing the arrival of fresh visitors, their visits to his Excellency, and his return visits to them at their various residences. The last to arrive was the lady for whose honour some of the chief preparations were being made—her Highness the Begum of Bhopal, about whose regiment of Amazons various speculative stories had been going the rounds of the town and island, and an expectant crowd, which had assembled to view these rara aves at the Byculla Station on Wednesday were disappointed, because it was discovered that the Begum merely possessed lady attendants, and not Amazons. Thursday, however, was the day which saw the consummation of all the hopes and fears of our loyal citizens, for on that day Lord Northbrook landed in State at the Government Dockyard. H. M.'s Dalhousie, with the Viceregal party, left Kurrachee on Tuesday morning last and arrived in harbour shortly before noon, and amidst the thunder of salutes from H. M.'s vessels in harbour, who with yards manned and bunting flying from stem to stern were the first to welcome the Viceroy on this, the second occasion of his visiting Bombay, the Dalhousie proceeded to her anchorage-ground abreast of the Dockyard landing stairs. Very shortly after her arrival H.E. the Governor went on board to pay a private visit, as the State landing was to take place shortly after four. Inside the Dockyard a huge shed extending for some distance from the landing place had been fitted up with scarlet-clothed seats from which visitors might witness the landing and formation of the procession. Long before the time appointed for the landing the shed was filled with native princes, and chieftains, military men, and ladies, and gentlemen, to whom the Dalhousie was the centre of attraction, until a boat with the Viceregal party was seen to leave the side and proceed through the line of boats, which extended from the landing stairs to the Dalhousie, in the direction of the Dockyard. Ten minutes later the Viceroy was walking up the centre aisle of the shed with H.E. the Governor, and the leading officials of the Presidency, bowing in response to the cordial welcome which greeted him from the occupants of the seats and conversing with some of the leading native potentates who were introduced by the Governor. The formation of the procession was rapidly proceeded with, and about 5 P.M. the head passed through the Dockyard gates and via Rampart Row down the Esplanade through the principal streets of the native town to Parell bridge, from whence the Viceroy accompanied by H.E. the Governor and some of the higher officials proceeded on to Government House, Parell. The roads throughout the whole distance were lined with enthusiastic crowds, and every house along the procession route had its quota of sightseers. In the evening there was a state dinner at Government House, Parell. The greater portion of the next day was devoted by the Viceroy to the reception of the native potentates, who commenced to arrive at 7.30 A.M., and were received in private Durbar by H.E. till 3.30 P.M. At 4 P.M., a Viceregal levee was held in the Town hall, at which an unprecedentedly large number of presentations took place. In the evening there was a State Ball at Government House, Parell. On Saturday morning H.E. received a deputation of the Justices, who presented H.E. with an address of welcome, and also the members of the Chamber of Commerce, who coupled their welcome with a memorial against the proposed export duties, and recommended several important questions to H.E.'s favourable consideration.

At four P.M. on Saturday, the Durbar for the Investiture of her Highness the Begum of Bhopal with the insignia of a G.C.S.I., and the Hon. John Strachey with that of a K.C.S.I., was held in an immense tent which had been erected for the purpose on the Esplanade, opposite to the new Secretariat. The sight was one of the most magnificent which Bombay has ever seen. Within the tent seats were provided for the accommodation of about a thousand spectators—at one end was a throne on which the Viceroy as Grand Master of the Order sat in his master's robes. On his right, the Governor and the Grand Commanders, Scindiah, Travancore, Sir Salar Jung, Rewah, and Kutub were seated, and on the left numbers of rajahs and native chiefs, who were not members of the Order, and consequently did not take part in the procession, were placed. The Begum was first invested, and then the Hon. John Strachey, after which the chapter was declared dissolved, and the procession of Knight Grand Commanders, each preceded by his banner, and followed by pages and attendants, left the durbar tent, and the company shortly afterwards dispersed, after having witnessed one of the most imposing sights ever seen here. In the evening there was a State dinner at Government House, Parell, which formed the wind-up of the week's festivities. His Excellency will leave Bombay for Poona on the 22nd inst.—Times of India, Nov. 18.

STATION TALK.

KOLAPORE, Oct. 26.—The Political Agent and other officials are engaged in making preparations for his Highness's departure to Bombay for the approaching durbar. His Highness will be accompanied by the Chiefs of Ichulkaranji, Kagal, Bowada, Kafasi, Targal and others. Not less than seven hundred men in all will accompany the Rajah to Bombay. The people are especially more glad, as the young Rajah will this time be probably invested with a poshakh by his Excellency the Viceroy, the highest representative of her Majesty in India. The Rajah and his dependent chiefs being all minors, with the exception of one or two, who are unimportant, are not expected to make any impression on the Viceroy. No pains are therefore spared to exhibit them to the best advantage in all external pomp and appearance. The only thing the people here are anxious about is the seat the Rajah shall have to occupy in the Durbar. His Highness, the Scindia, the Holkar, and the Gaikwad may have their territories greater in extent; they were nevertheless once the dependents of the deputy of the representatives of Sivajee the Great. These Chiefs will acknowledge this undisputed fact. The people therefore hope that due regard will be paid to the only representative of the founder of the Maratha empire, who is again a minor, as even in the height of the ascendancy of the Peishwa, the Kolapore Rajahs never succumbed under his sway. His Highness, with his feudatories, the Political Agent, and the State Karbharee, will leave Kolapore on the 30th instant. Major Westropp will act for the Political Agent during his absence in Bombay. Captain West has already proceeded to Bombay to appear at the departmental examination. To the astonishment of all and to the disappointment of the distressed people of Khandeish, the movement set on foot here to collect funds to afford relief to them does not present any signs of success. The whole sum collected up to this date will hardly amount to Rs. 150. It is true that those who took the lead in the movement, through the overflow of their sympathies for the starved, dispensed with calling a public meeting to place before the people the real state of those for whom assistance is sought, and thus to enlist the sympathies of all classes. None, however, expected such a repulse from the otherwise liberal aristocracy of Kolapore. Would not Kolapore, were a like calamity to befall it, blame Khandeish if it should not come forward with its mite to render timely assistance? The leaders, however, are not quite hopeless of still receiving liberal donations from the few blessed. The local High School has this year sent about twenty-six candidates to appear at the ensuing matriculation. One of them is the Chief of Ichulkaranji. I hope he may pass, and his example prove contagious. He will, I believe, be soon followed by the other chiefs who attend public schools in the town, and even his Highness the young Rajah, who has fairly begun his education, will, I hope, envy the distinction, and will be proud to receive literary honours from the learned University, as if to rival the fame of his lamented predecessor, Rajaram Maharaji.

RAEPOR, Oct. 25.—The regiment stationed here has been ordered to proceed to Nagode, a place somewhat near Jubbulpore. The best road selected for this regiment to march over is from here to Nagpore on foot, and thence by rail to Nagode. It is alleged that before going to Nagode the regiment has to stop at a railway station, from whence the place aforesaid is eighteen miles, which distance will have to be done on foot. In every direction I proceed I hear the complaints of the poor sepoys, some of whom have a large family and brothers, sisters, and persons of very near relation, and for whom they will certainly have to pay the railway fare, excepting themselves, children, and wives. The railway fare is, I hear, Rs. 8 per adult, and Rs. 4 per child under the age of fourteen years. Rs. 7 is the pay of a sepoy of a regiment, and he has a wife, and perhaps a poor old mother, a brother, and sisters, depending on him, and he could not spare anything for railway fare out of his small pay; and moreover he will have to pay for cart hire from here to Nagpore. The loss that Raepore will have to suffer by this regiment's departure is the playing of their band twice a week at the Government Garden, and once a week at the officers' mess-house. Raepore in the present day is in every way flourishing. I presume the regiment which is coming from Berhampore to relieve this has a band with it. The weather being cold, nights and days are very cloudy, and somewhat heavy winds are blowing unceasingly.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

SIR COWASJEE JEHAUGHIR.—From a letter addressed by Sir Cowasjee Jehaughir to the Secretaries of the Khandeish and Nassick Relief Fund, it appears that that liberal-minded citizen has shown his gratification at the Viceroy's visit by handing very substantial relief to the destitute cultivators of those provinces. We trust that Sir Cowasjee's course in this matter will meet with many imitators.

ADVICE TO POLITICAL AGENTS.—The Jam-i-Jamshed has the following:—"We rejoice at the prospect of so many princes and chiefs coming to Bombay, as this visit will open their eyes to works of education and reform. We, however, hope that sufficient care will be taken to save them from enormous expenses during their journey to and stay at Bombay. During the visit of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh these princes spent lots of money without a murmur, which the Political Agents should not allow to be repeated on this occasion. To pay Rs. 8,000, Rs. 10,000 or even Rs. 15,000 for the use of a bungalow for one month is no joke. Again, the Municipality have thought fit to charge Rs. 250 for the supply of Vehar water in each bungalow occupied by a rajah. Certainly this is exorbitant, and something ought to be done for the poor chiefs."

COOLIES FOR FRENCH SETTLEMENTS.—The French Government being very anxious to engage the services of an active agent at Bombay, for the purpose of recruiting coolies for the French colonies, applied to the Secretary of State for the Colonies for the assistance of Mr. Voley Vinay of this city. We now learn that the assent of the Home Government has been given to the appointment, conditional, of course, upon the sanction of the Government of Bombay. Although we cannot but regret that inducements should be held out to the sparse labouring population of India to migrate to other lands, we must say that the French Government could not have made a better selection. The office of Coolie Agent is one which demands in the office great prudence, caution, and activity, and there can be little doubt that Mr. Vinay will satisfactorily fulfil the expectations of the Government.—Times of India.

COTTON REPORT.—The weekly cotton report from Sind is nearly the same as the last, the crop is on the whole a favourable one. The arrivals of cotton in Kurrachee during the month of October have been small, the attention of merchants being given to the export of wheat to England. It would be useful information if we could learn whence this wheat came, and the average quality and value of it, for the trade in wheat will probably expand.—Guzerat: The report from Surat, Broach, Kaira, Ahmedabad, Veerungam, and Dholera, describes the cotton plant as looking well and being very healthy; the weather being cool, with temperature falling sometimes to 60 deg.—

Khandeish: The cotton crop has, as already reported, suffered in some parts from the effects of excess of moisture, but on the whole, Mr. Wilkinson reports, the outturn will be equal to thirteen or fourteen annas or 65 lbs. to 70 lbs. per acre.—Southern Maratha Country: Reports continue good from all parts of the district. Thunder-storms with showers are usual about Dewallee time, but the rain which threatened for a few days passed off—a matter for regret, as some showers would have done much good. The quality of old cotton remaining in the district is not likely to be very good, a more than usually large portion of the crop having been sent forward before the rains.

THE 105TH REGIMENT.—A letter from Toondla in the Delhi Gazette, dated Nov. 9, says:—"The 105th Regiment arrived from Meerut on the morning of the 6th by special train, destined for Aden, mustering eighteen officers, two officers' wives, seven children, and one medical warrant officer, 308 rank and file, twenty-nine women and thirty-eight children. A corporal of the regiment was tried by court martial for being drunk on the line of march, and sentenced to be reduced to the ranks. The Colonel commanding did not accompany the regiment, having been left behind on account of illness, but as the malady he has been affected with is of no serious consequence, it is expected he will meet the regiment at Bombay before embarking for Aden. The men of the regiment did not appear very healthy-looking, and from the frequent moving about of the dooly in camp, I fear a good number had gone sick to hospital. I also observed a few men limping, and from personal enquiries I learnt that they were old cases of dengue approaching recovery, otherwise the officers and men were doing well. I must not omit mentioning that the corps acts up to the rules of discipline strictly; from the time of their arrival and up to the time of their departure there was a regular sounding of bugles all that day, and both non-commissioned officers and men were to be seen moving about in camp regimentally dressed."

MEDICAL STAFF OFFICERS' FURLOUGH ALLOWANCES.

The following military letter from the Right Hon. the Sec. of State for India is published in the Gazette of India:—

India Office, London, Sept. 10, 1872.

To H.E. the Right Hon. the Governor general of India in Council.

My Lord,—I have received and considered in Council your Lordship's military letter No. 116 of July 1, 1872, on the subject of the rate of pay admissible to British medical staff officers holding administrative appointments in India, the tenure of which is limited to five years.

On a consideration of the orders already published on the subject, I have resolved that these officers, when absent from India, shall be placed on a similar footing as regards furlough allowances as officers commanding divisions and brigades, and shall be allowed to receive during the period of their absence on medical certificate, which is to be restricted to six months, their Indian allowances and half staff salary. During absence on private affairs, which is to be limited to four months, no pay will be issued.

In no case will more than one grant of leave out of India be allowed.

As stated in your G.O. No. 1,037 of Nov. 24, 1871, these officers will, on arrival in England, be examined by a medical board, and, if reported unfit for further service in India, they will be removed from the Indian establishment.

With regard to the inquiry contained in your despatch under reply, I have to inform you that British medical staff officers appointed to India, subsequent to the publication of the rules of 1868, have not the option of electing the Furlough Rules of 1854.—I have, &c., ARGYLL.

CARTRIDGE CASES.—The attention of officers commanding regiments of cavalry and infantry is called to G.G.O. No. 681 of 1870, and commanding officers are reminded that they are responsible that at least 90 per cent. of the empty cartridge cases are delivered into store.

LEAVE TO OFFICERS VISITING THE CAMP OF EXERCISE.—In a general order, dated Head-quarters, Lahore, Nov. 2, the C. in C. sanctions leave being granted to officers desirous of visiting the Camp of Exercise, in such proportion as will not interfere with the duties of the station or corps to which they belong. With the view of removing all misapprehension, in regard to the applications of the rule contained in paragraph 20 of G.O.P.C. No. 278 of Feb. 26, 1855 (G.G.O. No. 242 of 1855), it is hereby notified, under instructions from Government, that the rule in question was laid down with the express purpose of limiting the liability of the State to cases in which it can be clearly shown that the diseased animal could not be removed by its owner from the immediate proximity of Government cattle, which would be in danger of infection.

Para. 20.—Indemnification for horses of officers destroyed on account of having farcy, or glanders, will only be admitted when it is shown that the destruction of the animal was necessary to prevent infection to other horses in the same stable, or in close proximity thereto, whose loss would be liable to be defrayed by the public.

CLOTHING.

The cloth clothing issued to British troops being now provided with a leather tab, H.E. the C. in C. is pleased to direct that the black silk neck cloth, authorised in G.O. Jan. 28 (G.O.C. ESTABLISHMENT—MARRIED SOLDIERS.

The C. in C. in India being of opinion that the same qualifications which render soldiers at home and in the colonies eligible to have their names placed on the married roll should be required from those serving in India; H.E. is pleased to direct that, in future, trumpeters, drummers, and rank and file shall not be permitted to marry until they have completed seven years' service, and are in possession of at least one good conduct badge.

No non-commissioned officer or soldier will be placed on the married roll, or be entitled to any of its advantages, unless he had obtained the consent of the commanding officer to his marriage before it took place.

On no account are bills to be tendered or received in payment. Nothing but British money will, as a rule, be received, and officers are to provide themselves before embarking with sufficient cash accordingly. In the event of this course not being practicable, and of officers not having sufficient British money in their possession, rupees may be taken in payment at the current authorised rate.

PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION.

On Friday the annual meeting of this company was held at the offices in Leadenhall-street; Mr. P. D. Hadow in the chair.

The report, an abstract of which appeared in our last, was taken as read.

The Chairman said the report contained a full and correct statement of the company's affairs, and he hoped that the shareholders would accept as satisfactory the course the directors had been pursuing. The report had made no mention of the Suez Canal, but the company was paying at the new rate demanded. A protest had been entered against that, but for all that they had paid the company £25,000. The payment had not been without the profit on that trade. He believed a conference would be held in Constantinople concerning the charges on the Canal, and he hoped the Government would watch over British interests. The Australian mail contract was a matter not mentioned in the report, and this was a contract which would expire at the end of 1873, and the question of the renewal of the contract was being agitated very largely in the colonies. Considering the excellent manner in which the company had carried the mails, the interests of the company would be watched in the Colonies. China gave the company a large amount of its work, and considering how the trade to that country was increasing, it was worth while increasing the service to that country when the company had the ships ready for the trade. (Hear, hear.) With regard to the coal question, he said nearly every one had felt the increase; but the company, owing to the fact that it had made large contracts before the rise, had obtained its coals greatly below what others had had to pay. There now seemed an inclination to fall in price, and the company should not make any contracts for the present. This year the company had used about 13,000 tons of Australian coal, and good it was, and was used in the ships on the return voyage, and coal was also had in India. More Australian coal would be used but that the delivery of it was defective at present, through there being no back cargo from the stations. He referred to the retirement of Mr. Howell, the late secretary, on half-pay, and, amid cheers, he said he was sure Mr. Howell retired with the deep respect of all the proprietors. He stated that all the work had been done during the year without a single casualty to the ships, and without any material injury to machinery, and, under Providence, the company had reason to be thankful to its commanders, officers, and engineers. The year had been disadvantageous in some respects, but the company had done much, and before long it would have four ships working with 20 to 30 tons of coal per day, in place of 40 to 50 tons as formerly. He moved the adoption of the report.

Mr. Roupell seconded the motion.

Mr. Gliddon, who said he was happy for once to be placed in the position of supporting the directors' policy, went at length into the affairs of the company, and said that the directors had taken a wise course throughout.

Many questions were asked on matters of detail, and the report was adopted unanimously.

The Chairman then proposed the dividend of 3 per cent. and 1 per cent. from the underwriting account, clear of income-tax.

This was also carried nem. con., and votes of thanks to the chairman and directors, and to Mr. Howell closed the proceedings.

THE DEATH OF SIR DONALD McLEOD.

On Monday last Mr. Bedford, coroner for Westminster, held an inquiry, lasting nearly four hours, at St. George's Hospital, into the circumstances attending the death of Sir Donald Friell McLeod, who was killed on Thursday evening week while attempting to get into a Mansion house train at the Gloucester-road Station of the Metropolitan District Railway. Mr. Wingate (from the offices of Messrs. Baxter, Rose, and Norton) attended on behalf of the company; and Major Innes, nephew of the deceased, watched the case on behalf of the family.

The inquest-room was crowded with military and other friends of the deceased.

Sir Robert Montgomery, of 7, Cornwall-gardens, identified the body as that of Donald Friell McLeod, his son-in-law, aged sixty-two. He was a retired Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

Robert Morrish said he was a platelayer in the service of the District Railway Company. On Thursday evening week at 5 o'clock he got into a London and North-Western train at the Earl's-court Station and rode to the Gloucester-road Station, where he got out, and walked towards the stairs leading off to the platform. He stood there waiting for a main line up train. While so standing he saw deceased run down the stairs towards the train witness had just left, which at that time was going out of the station towards the City. The deceased took hold of the handle of the door of one of the carriages. Inspector Robinson ran after the deceased as if to stop him. There was a shout, and the inspector went along the two-foot-way. Witness followed the inspector, and about 20 yards up the line they found the deceased lying on his stomach in the two-foot-way. The train had then stopped, and was about 10 yards in advance of the deceased. The deceased was at once picked up, placed on a board, and taken upstairs into the office. A medical man came in about ten minutes, and ordered his removal to St. George's Hospital. He was taken there in a van with witness.

Replying to the Coroner, witness said he was quite certain the train was in motion when the deceased took hold of the carriage door. He believed it was in motion when the deceased was running down the stairs.

Edward Robinson said he was station inspector at the Gloucester road Station. He was on duty at 5 o'clock on Thursday evening week on the middle bridge. At that time a London and North-Western train ran into the station on its way to the City. He saw all the passengers on the platform for the City get into the train. He saw the guard wave his flag for the train to go on, and the train began to move out of the station. At that moment he saw the deceased run up the stairs from the Brompton platform, and down the stairs to the City platform. He called to him, and said, "You are too late for that train." The deceased, however, not taking any notice, ran down the stairs on to the platform, and took hold of the handle of one of the carriage doors. The door was closed and the train was moving out fast. He ran after the deceased, who had got the door open, and was running by the side of the train. He called out to him to stop, or he would be run over. The deceased then attempted to get into the carriage, when his right foot slipped, and he was dragged some yards, still keeping hold of the carriage door. On getting to the end of the platform he saw deceased fall between the wall and the train. He ran towards the spot, and found the deceased lying between the wall and the rails. Both his feet were off. He was at once lifted up, and having been seen by a medical man, was then removed to the hospital.

By the Coroner: There were two footboards outside the carriages, but neither of them came close up to the platform. There was a space between the upper footboards outside the carriages where a person might slip through. Very few passengers used the footboard, but stepped from the platform into the carriage. The deceased did not fall until he got to the slope at the end of the platform, when he appeared to twist round and fall between the wall and the rails. Witness had no means of stopping the train as it moved out of the station. The porter whose duty it was to attend to the train was on duty on the platform at the time.

Richard Batten said he was porter at the Gloucester-road Station in the employ of the District Railway Company. He was on duty at the station when the London and North-Western train came in from Earl's-court Station about five o'clock. He attended to the train when it came in, and after all the passengers got in he called out to the guard at the rear of the train "All right." He called out twice. The guard then gave his signal to the driver to go on. The train was in motion, when he heard some one call out "Stand back there." He looked round, and saw the deceased come on to the platform from the stairs and run up to one of the carriage doors and open it. In attempting to get into the carriage his foot slipped, and he saw the deceased fall through. He at once whistled to the guard to stop the train, which was moving rapidly out of the station. In answer to the Coroner, witness said he was quite positive the carriage door was shut, and that it was opened by the deceased. At the time the deceased took hold of the carriage door the train had got almost into full speed.

James Hutchins said he was guard in the employ of the London and North-Western Railway Company. He was acting as guard of the train which on Thursday evening week at 5 o'clock arrived at the Gloucester-road Station. The train stopped at the station a good minute. He received the signal "All right" twice from the last witness. He, according to rule, on the train arriving at the station, got out of his van and saw all the passengers into the carriages. On receiving the signal "All right" from the porter, he gave the usual signal to the driver to go on, and got into his van. The train moved out of the station, and at that time he saw no person near the train. After the train had gone about three carriage lengths he heard some one shouting in the rear of the train. He at once applied his brake, and stopped the train. It stopped almost directly. The train was then going at about the rate of ten miles an hour. The train was four minutes behind time.

James Kingston, the driver of the train, said that, seeing the deceased was in danger, he at once shut off steam, and ordered his fireman to apply the brake. The train stopped after going on about its own length. The train was then in the tunnel, going at the rate of ten miles an hour.

Replying to the Coroner, witness said he did not blow his whistle. The train could not have been stopped sooner than it was.

Mr. Baker, house surgeon, said he saw deceased on his admission on the Thursday evening at six o'clock. He was conscious. Both legs had been taken off below the knees, and the left arm was smashed, hanging to the shoulder by a small piece of skin. He died from the shock to the system at a few minutes after ten o'clock.

The Coroner, in summing up, said there could be no doubt upon the minds of the jury that the deceased had lost his life by attempting to get into a railway train while in motion. But the main question for them to decide was whether any blame attached to the railway officials for neglect of duty, or to the railway company for not taking the necessary steps to prevent accidents of this description.

The jury deliberated for some time, and ultimately returned the following verdict:—"That the deceased came by his death accidentally through attempting to get into a train after it had been fairly and properly started." They added a recommendation that the railway company should place gates at the bottom of each staircase, and make some alteration in the footboards of the carriages.

Sir Robert Montgomery here rose and expressed his gratitude, and that of the relatives of the deceased, for the great kindness and attention showed the deceased at the hospital.

Miscellaneous.

THE BOMBAY, BARODA, AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY reports a decrease of 704 per cent. on the expense of working, notwithstanding an increase in the train miles of 50,556½. The repair of bridges which were injured by the great floods involved considerable extra expense—an extra payment at the rate of 1s. 8d per cent. per annum.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £650,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 4th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £426,600; to Bombay, £220,000; and to Madras, £3,400. The minimum price was fixed as before, at 1s. 10½d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 10½d. will receive about 25 per cent., and on Bombay at that price about 50 per cent.

A DISABLED STEAMER.—The steamship Agra, 1,850 tons, Captain Matthews, of the British Steam Navigation Company, arrived at Plymouth on Saturday morning from London, and transshipping twenty passengers from the steamer Hindoo, sailed for Madras and Calcutta. The Hindoo, which recently arrived at Plymouth in a leaky condition, left Plymouth Sound on Saturday morning for London, there to tranship her cargo to the steamer Othello, which vessel will call at Plymouth on the 16th inst. to embark the rest of the Hindoo's passengers.

A MEDAL FOR LOSHAI.—We understand that her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to command that the officers and men of the Loshai Expeditionary Force shall be awarded the India medal of 1854, with clasp for "Loshai." Such officers and men who are already in possession, for other services, of the India medal, will receive the clasp only. Officers commanding regiments and the heads of departmental staffs have been directed to prepare nominal rolls. Claimants who have been discharged must apply through the officer commanding the regiment or department to which they belonged at the time of the expedition.

MADRAS IRRIGATION AND CANAL COMPANY.—The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on Nov. 30 at the office, Queen-street-place; Mr. J. Thomson in the chair. The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said that on the 1st of June last the water from the Toombudda River was let into the main canal; everything went on without mishap; and on the 10th of July the water reached Cuddapah, a distance of 190 miles, being at the rate of half a mile per hour. The engineering staff had now been reduced. The Government had demanded the return of the £600,000 they had lent the company to complete the works, and he was glad to say that the issue by the company of debentures at 5 per cent. had been successful, and that £82,000 had already been paid off. They greatly regretted the loss by death of Field Marshal Sir G. Pollock, who had been an excellent colleague, and had lived to a good old age. The Hon. A. Kinnaird, M.P., seconded the resolution for the adoption of the report. After a short discussion the report was unanimously adopted, the retiring directors (Lieutenant-Colonel J. Grimes and Mr. A. Hall) were re-elected, and also Mr. E. Harding, the retiring auditor.

INDIAN APPEAL—GOPEE LOLL V. MUSSAMAT SREE CHUNDRUOLKE BUHOJEE AND OTHERS.—This appeal was from the High Court of Judicature of Agra, and raised a question of adoption of a son, under the Hindoo law. The principal property consisted of temples endowed for the worship of idols. The property affected by the suit had been frequently the subject-matter of litigation. A predecessor of both parties having seven sons, built seven temples, with estates attached to each, and divided them amongst his seven sons. The present suit related only to the temples and estates settled on one of the sons. One Damodurjee had two wives, and before his death authorised each of his wives to adopt a son, and in pursuance of such authority, the wife Luchmee adopted the deceased father of the appellant, and the other wife Charmuttee, adopted one Luchmun, the deceased husband of the respondent. The suit in India had been instituted by the appellant, in consequence of the respondent preventing and obstructing him in the worship of the temple at Gocool Nath. Sir Robert Collier, in giving judgment on the hearing, said their lordships understood the High Court simply to have ruled that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the title on which they sued; that the Principal Sudder Ameen's decision ought to be reversed; and that the suit be dismissed with costs; but, inasmuch as the formal decree, which merely ordered that the appeal be decreed with costs and the decision of the Principal Sudder Ameen be reversed, might lead to some doubt as to what was really decided by the High Court, their lordships thought that the formal decree should be varied by ordering that the decision of the Principal Sudder Ameen be reversed, and the suit dismissed with costs in both courts. Their lordships would, therefore, humbly advise her Majesty to that effect. The appellant must pay the costs of this appeal. Their lordships then adjourned, and Sir C. Colville informed the bar that the Court would not proceed with Indian appeals until Dec. 17.

NAUTICAL INCIDENTS.

The Dhoolia (s.), which put into Ryde with engines out of order, sailed again on Dec. 1.

The Princess Beatrice, for Bombay, anchored at Deal on the 4th inst., with crew refractory.

The Northern Queen slipped from another anchor and chain, having drifted during the gale and hooked the moorings of the Deal bank buoy; the vessel afterwards anchored, and has since been supplied with another anchor.

Spirit of the Home Journals.

THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL COMPANY.

The Daily Telegraph, in alluding to the general working of this company, says:—There are some facts in the last magnificent ledger account of the great maritime company known to all the world as the "P. and O.," which merit notice. The first is the successful working of the plan of underwriting from the company's own funds. In spite of a loss of nearly £80,000 in connection with the Rangoon, £27,000 have been distributed to shareholders from the insurance account, and nearly as much carried to the general reserve fund. The next point is the revolution which has been caused in steam navigation by the "high and low," or "compound engine," principle.

This is coming into universal use, and the "P. and O." will shortly have twenty-two vessels thus fitted. The third noticeable fact is the immense traffic through the Suez Canal. Whereas last year 700,000 tons of shipping passed through "the ditch," in rivalry with the great association, no less than 1,250,000 tons competed with it during the last twelve months for the passenger and goods business of the Eastern seas. Freight rates were very low, fares had to be diminished, and though a certain economy has been effected by the disuse of unlimited wine and spirits on board, yet the company felt the stress of this fierce competition. They pay, however, a dividend of 7 per cent. on the year's budget, and their new extensions, with good luck at sea, will still maintain them, it is clear, a prosperous and well-conducted naval power.

ENGLISH JUSTICE IN INDIA.

The Pull Mail Gazette hold that the two policies which lie before the Indian Government are distinct, manly, and straightforward, and a great deal is to be said for each. On the one hand they may adopt with whatever modifications and alleviations they think necessary the common English principle that people must pay their debts and that contracts must be enforced. On the other hand they may, if they think it right, prepare a measure for India in the nature of an Incumbered Estates Act, or rather in the nature of an Act for paying off so much of the incumbrances of landed proprietors as may be considered to have been incurred fairly. Either of these courses is perfectly intelligible and straightforward; but the writer in the Times takes a convenient middle course which neither affirms that debts shall be paid nor that they shall not be paid in full. He would throw the difficulty on to the judges. Under the veil of phrases about "simple systems," as opposed to the "refinements of law unintelligible to natives," and other language of the same kind, he would give a sort of hint to judges to do in detail what the Government of India does not dare to do openly and in plain words. The policy is cowardly and dishonest. It places every one connected with it in a false position and utterly deceives the public at large. It involves falsehood at every step. Nothing can be more false than to say that the Code of Civil Procedure is full of technicalities and forms. It has probably as few as our own County Court Acts or fewer. The difference between the present procedure of the Punjab Courts and their procedure before the introduction of the Code of Civil Procedure is this. The judges are now obliged to hear the witnesses themselves, and take down a note of their evidence with their own hands, and to see that the mohurrir, or native writer, who takes it down verbatim takes it correctly. Under the old patriarchal system there would be, perhaps, five or six mohurrirs squatting in different parts of the Court, and taking down the evidence of as many witnesses at the same time. The judge looked over these depositions, or more probably heard them read over to him, afterwards, and formed his opinion on the result, without himself hearing or seeing the witnesses. Of course by this "rough-and-ready" system he got through a great deal of business, but whether he "dispensed substantial justice" is quite another question. There is, perhaps, no subject in the world on which a greater amount of utter nonsense is talked than what is called "the patriarchal system," and the "simple forms of justice suited to the native mind," which are contrasted with "our refined systems of law" in India. Make a man speak plainly, and you will always find either that he thinks that every district officer should be absolute king in his own bounds, or that he does not like the trouble of taking down evidence and writing judgments which may be appealed against afterwards. An Indian civilian once observed, "I hate your refined way of administering justice. It is monstrous that one should have to take notes and give reasons. The plan which I always find best is just to listen to the witnesses and let their evidence produce a general effect on my mind." "Best" here meant, as it often does, easiest. It is much less disagreeable to sit quietly under a punkah and let a case be tried by clerks than to try it yourself; but easy justice makes hard cases as surely as easy writing makes hard reading.

THE HISTORY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE IN INDIA.

FROM THE
APPOINTMENT OF LORD HARDINGE
TO THE
COMPANY.

BY
LIONEL JAMES TROTTER,

Late of the 2nd Bengal Fusiliers.

The first volume of this History embraces the period from Lord Hardinge's appointment in 1844 to the retirement of the Marquis of Dalhousie in 1866.

The second volume commences with the arrival of Lord Canning in India in 1856, and closes with his lordship's death in 1862. This being the most eventful period in the annals of the East India Company, including the Mutiny, great pains have been taken in its narration.

"Captain Trotter has done good service in providing the public with a sequel to a standard work. . . . And in every way his performance is worthy to take rank with that of his predecessor. . . . The thoroughly satisfactory manner in which the task has been performed is greatly to the author's credit. . . . We take our leave of the work, congratulating its author upon having produced an addition to the 'History of India' at once permanent in purpose and popular in execution; acceptable in every way to the wants of the public, and especially adapted for the enlightenment of young members of the local service, to whom the modern annals of the country which they help to administer are of far more importance than the history of remote periods having little or no relation to the present day."—Standard.

"Both the plan and execution of the work are deserving of high praise. Full of interest and animation, and narrates with clearness and brevity all that took place during the period of which it treats. . . . The second volume of Mr. Trotter's history possesses the same merits by which the first was distinguished. It is written with great animation, and often with considerable graphic power. It tells its story with perspicuity and without needless or tiresome digressions. It avoids as far as possible that controversial vein into which Indian politicians and historians are alike prone to fall, and it is as impartial as any work is likely to be which deals with times so near our own. . . . The narrative of the spirit-stirring events of the mutiny will of course have the greatest attraction for most readers, and it is in truth the best, as it is the principal part of the present volume. . . . It appears to us that Mr. Trotter has been eminently successful in his treatment of a very exciting and interesting period of recent history."—London Review.

"The volume is full of interesting matter, comprising every event of importance during the exciting period of the rebellion, told in a concise, straightforward, and impartial manner, unimpaired by those copious extracts from documentary evidence which often serve no other purpose than increasing the bulk without adding to the usefulness of a work of this description."—Observer.

"Captain Trotter's reflections are few. . . . He has his own views, though he does not force them upon us in detail. . . . All this proves him to be far above the narrowness of the average Anglo-Indian. He speaks out boldly, too, in defence of Lord Gough. . . . A word as to our author's descriptive powers; they are such as his lighter writings would lead us to expect. . . . Whatever he has to tell Captain Trotter tells it in an animated and picturesque style. The night on the field at Ferozeshahur is admirably painted; so is the grand success of Goojat. The disarming of the veterans of the Khalsa is a striking scene. Captain Trotter's book opens up many other interesting questions; it is full of notices of social changes; it points out the specially unfortunate way in which the annexation of Oudh was managed."—Fortnightly Review.

"Here we have before us the first volume of an eminently readable history. . . . The arrangement of the matter, the style, and, above all, the spirit which pervades his pages, are worthy of great commendation. Mr. Trotter is singularly free from the faults of a partisan writer. . . . The volume concludes with a masterly criticism on Lord Dalhousie's character and services."—Calcutta Englishman.

"We cannot say that he has dealt unjustly by Lord Canning's memory. . . . A well-considered volume, in which the heartiest acknowledgments are paid to Lord Canning for his temperate wisdom at a time when there was no man more abused than he. . . . He writes thoughtfully, yet with a soldier's sense of the stir of a brisk military narrative. His history of this great struggle is full and impartial. . . . We need not follow him through his vigorous rehearsal of the well-known incidents. It forms a very lucid history, the several parts being well planned and well grouped, and no important point being omitted or misrepresented."—Examiner.

should consider this invaluable Ointment an essential to a well-appointed nursery. No difficulty or danger attends its application, providing moderate attention is bestowed upon the directions enveloping every pot.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, November 25; Agra and Madras, November 23; Calcutta, November 22.

THE Bombay papers are filled of course with detailed accounts of Lord Northbrook's doings down to date. On Monday the 18th November and the following day, his Lordship was busy paying return visits to many of the native Princes and nobles who had been present at the grand Darbâr of the previous week. On Tuesday evening the Viceroy's party were present at a magnificent ball given by Sir Albert Sassoon to more than a thousand guests. On Wednesday, the 20th, he received in state all those Princes and Chiefs of Western India who were assembled for that purpose in Bombay. Earlier in the day the Viceroy received an address from the Bombay Association complaining that natives were still virtually shut out from the higher offices of State in spite of laws enacted to the contrary. His Lordship in reply declared that his Council were even then considering how to obtain the services of the most competent natives, but that he for one had small faith in the pertinence of the competitive principle to the present wants and condition of the Indian people. He promised however to "recognise to the fullest extent the desirability of gradually extending the employment of the natives of India in several important branches of the public service." With regard to the question of retrenchment and reduced taxation his Lordship for the present would only avow his economical intentions, and express a confident hope that next year some reduction would be made in the public burdens.

IN his speech after the dinner given to him on Wednesday evening by the Byculla Club, Lord Northbrook owned how strongly his tour through a country so vast and varied as India, had convinced him of the folly of applying one uniform system of government to an empire made up of so many different races, creeds, and social traits. As for the principle of enlarging the powers of provincial governments, he declared himself heartily at one with the late Lord Mayo, who held that the new system of "separate assignments" to each province was "only a beginning" of the work that was still to do in that direction. Another lesson which the Viceroy owned to having already learned is "the importance of completing the railway communication between Karâchi and the Punjâb."

THE opening of the Jamsetjee Benevolent Institution, which not only boards and educates hundreds of Parsee boys and girls, but provides pensions for the old and dowers for the daughters of the poor, likewise took up part of the Viceroy's well-occupied time on the 20th November. Next day his Lordship visited the Arsenal and the Lunatic Asylum, admired the Cave of Elephanta, and closed his last day's work in Bombay at a splendid banquet given by Maharajah Sindia, which is said to have rivalled if it could not eclipse the Sassoon Ball. On this occasion Sindia in spirited terms recalled the days of 1857, when his own army turned against him, and he fled for safety to his English friends. Whenever the English Government might again need help from its lieges, his Highness pledged himself and his army to their cause. If we may put our trust in him, can he answer for the loyalty of his present army?

ON Friday, the 22nd, Lord Northbrook set out for Pûna, to become for a few days the guest of the Governor, Sir Philip Wodehouse, who entertained him the same night at a ball at Ganesh Kind. Next morning the Viceroy was out at seven, paying a series of visits to the Schools of Pûna, and the hospital. On the same afternoon he held a levée, and thoroughly inspected the Arsenal.

It appears that Lord Northbrook has conclusively decided against annexing Sind to the Punjab; but it is not unlikely that Sind will anyhow be separated from the Government of Bombay. In that case, it is almost certain that the Central Provinces would be broken up, one part falling to Bombay, and the other to the North-West Provinces.

LORD NORTHBROOK was to hold levees at Nâgpur, Kâmpî, and Jabalpur on the 29th and 30th November, and the 9th December respectively. The visit to Barwai to lay the first stone of a railway bridge across the Narbadda would therefore take place between the last two dates.

A MR. BANERMAN has arrived in India, under orders from the Secretary of State to visit the chief iron mines in the country, and report on the best means of working them.

CANAL making is about to be pushed forward in Bengal. One strip of land, 50 miles long by 227 feet broad, has been taken up by the Government for the Patamandy Branch Canal. Another strip, 25 miles long by 200 feet broad, has been taken up for an extension of the Machgong Canal. Moreover, 89 strips, making a total length of 300 miles, with an average width of 100 feet, are reserved for a system of distributary channels and branches. The whole of these new irrigation works are meant for the special benefit of Cuttack.

ON the evening of the 12th December, according to a recent telegram, Lord Northbrook was once more safely lodged in Government House, Calcutta, after an eventful tour of nearly two months through the Punjab, Sindh, Bombay, and Central India.

A BOMBAY telegram of December 12 reports the departure on that day of the Indian troopship Crocodile with troops for Portsmouth.

IN spite of all that has been said, written, or ordered, on the subject, the dreadful Bardwan fever seems to be ravaging Lower Bengal in the old fashion. Poor people are dying by the roadside, and fever-stricken forms that look like bundles of rags meet the eye at every turn. Strong men reappear so worn and fleshless, that their own friends can scarcely recognise them. In many cottages whole families have been ill together, without medicines or help of any kind. Beyond sending a few doctors and some quinine to the suffering districts, the local government is said to have done nothing against the fever. Here and there private charity has striven to make up for the dearth of public effort, as in the case of a generous Scotch workman at Ishera, who is described by the Friend of India as giving out quinine and brandy freely at his own cost. While the Government is thinking what to do next and haggling over the hire of assistant native apothecaries, the fever, we are told, is spreading rapidly into new districts, and the land in many places is lying idle for want of men to till it. Now that Lord Northbrook has returned to Calcutta, it is to be hoped that one of his first labours will be a vigorous effort to deal with this mournful state of things. We could almost wish that the doctrine which connects this disease with the recent prevalence of Dengue in Calcutta were true, if so the Government and people of Bengal could be spurred into taking all prompt and possible measures for abating a scourge which is gradually unpeopling part of a large province. One known or widely asserted source of the evil is the want of a good system of surface drainage to carry off the waters that stagnate over large tracts of country after the rains. On this point the native Press has been harping with unwonted unanimity for weeks past; and there is reason to suppose that the very railway embankments, which in their own way are a blessing to the country, have aggravated the mischief caused by defective drainage. Be that as it may, however, it is time that something should be done to grapple with the apparent causes of a plague which threatens to convert the once smiling districts of Bardwan and Húghli into an unpeopled waste.

How to get rid of the "general duty" officers in the Indian Army is a problem which the latest orders issued from Westminster have apparently done but little towards solving. To judge from the many letters published in the Indian papers, as well as the small response yet given to those offers at home, the drain upon the Indian revenues will not be greatly reduced by the new arrangement. Timeo Danaos, et dona ferentes is still the spirit in which Indian officers greet the proposal to take indefinite furlough on a pound a day. Lieutenant-Colonel "R. A. G. Famish" for instance writes to a Bombay journal, that he is unable to see in the Duke's offer "anything but a polite request that I should make the Government a present of £835 a-year for the privilege of starving in England on £365, with the additional privilege of being compelled to forego or forfeit my vested right in the Indian pay and allowances of a lieutenant-colonel, if it should please his Grace to order me to return to duty in a moment of sickness, or after I had accepted some appointment at home, or made some other arrangement to supplement the pound a day the Government is prepared to allow me." The writer in question, we may add, is no idler from his own choice. After a service of twenty-seven years, including three campaigns with a soldierly allowance of wounds and illness, besides three staff appointments and a record free from any shadow of blame, he finds himself in good health consigned to the forced inaction of general duty, because no employment can be obtained for him. Is it likely that he will exchange his £1,200 a-year in India for the privilege of "starving in England" on a pound a day? Of course he plainly tells us that he prefers staying where he is, and it needs no wizard to foretell that nine officers out of ten in the same circumstances will make the same choice. He himself indeed states as a matter of fact that the bulk of those lieutenant-colonels whom he has heard express an opinion on the subject are resolved to do what he has done. From many other quarters we have heard the same cry. It is in short a well-known fact that numbers of old officers, both employed and unemployed, are willing to forego their Indian pay at once with all prospect of Colonels' Allowances, if they could only retire on pensions suited to their length of service and the greatly increased expenses of living like gentlemen at home. Give them for instance the rates of pension proposed a few years back by Lord Mayo's Government, and we are bold to say that the Indian services would soon cease to be clogged with idle or discontented officers hanging on for their Colonel's Allowances. These gentlemen have no more notion of dying off at an abnormal pace to please the actuaries at home, than they have of starving on the terms hitherto offered them in this country. In the interests whether of justice, economy, or military efficiency, we would entreat his Grace to take the bull boldly by the horns, and allay by reasonable offers the rising discontent of a body of gentlemen who ask for nothing but fair play.

It appears by the telegram that Sir Bartle Frere reached Alexandria on Saturday last. He and his party were to proceed to Cairo to-day, where they will be the guests of the Khedive.

IF Mr. Grant Duff had nothing to say about India in his annual address to his constituents, Mr. Bourke at any rate treated the electors of King's Lynn to "a few words" on that subject, which fill more than a column and a-half of the Times. What he said however was worth the hearing, whether he spoke as the brother of the late Viceroy, or as one who has himself travelled over a large part of the country which Lord Mayo was set to govern. He began with a shrewd admission that the indifference of the House of Commons to Indian subjects served at any rate to keep the Indian Executive from being hampered by the interference of "unskilled and uninformed advisers;" although he could not deny the tendency of passing events to bring India into closer and ever closer connection with this country. What with telegraphs, railways, schools, and other influences working to bring about a great social revolution in India through the spread of English habits and ideas, not only is public opinion at home turning more and more towards India, but "a powerful public opinion is growing up in India itself." Mr. Bourke sees nothing to fear from intelligent criticism; but he warns his hearers against being led away by one-sided statements issuing from the mouthpieces of a very small minority, or by a rash desire to "apply the principles of English government to Asiatics." No man, he holds, "can be in India a month without seeing the folly and wickedness" of an attempt in the latter direction. It is on the personal influence of each Commissioner and Collector that the well-being of the people must still depend. A good district officer is still the best channel of communication between the Viceroy and his people. Such an one does consult native opinion, but "it is difficult to obtain native opinion that is really sound." No one acquainted with India will deny the truth of this; but in objecting to the scheme of district councils as a means of getting at that opinion the speaker suggests difficulties which men of far wider and deeper Indian experience would make of small account. How are we to control and utilise the march of Western influences in India for our own advantage as well as that of the people, if we shut ourselves off from all new means of gauging the extent and meaning of the changes which are avowedly going on around us? When the natives have begun with our help to move forward, are we suddenly to enforce upon them the duty of standing still? Mr. Bourke himself in the course of his address supplies an argument against himself. In defending the legislative work of late years, he attacks the notion that India wants rest from further changes. "If rest means abstention from introducing reforms into the social condition of the people which the rapid change of circumstances requires, I say rest means retrogression, and the Government of India is likely to find circumstances too strong for it in this acceptance of the term." If rest be dangerous in respect of social, is it less dangerous in respect of political movements? Mr. Bourke quotes approvingly Colonel Chesney's remarks on the mischief of applying an uniform system of taxation to the whole of India. Now, one chief aim of the proposed councils would be the levying of taxes suited to particular provinces or districts; and if new taxes are to be imposed, it is surely good policy to secure some show of popular countenance to the taxes that may seem best suited to the occasion.

MR. BOURKE also sees a great opening for private enterprise "in making cheap branch railways and tramways, in cultivating tea on the slopes of the Himalayas and Nilgiris, and in growing cotton on the plains." It is more than doubtful whether tea would grow on the Nilgiris; but there can be no harm in encouraging private enterprise in any part of India to do many things which have hitherto been undertaken by the Government. The only question is how much, as things are, should be left to private enterprise in a country where so little of it is to be found outside the old beaten tracks. On the subject of our relations with the Native States, Mr. Bourke lays significant stress. As the paramount Power in India, we are bound, he thinks, not only to protect them from foreign foes, but to look after their general welfare, and insist on the maintenance of internal peace and order. Many of the native princes have already begun to appreciate our good intentions and to follow our example. In Jaipur and Haidarabad especially great progress has already been made in public works, education, and other matters of like importance. It only remains for us to encourage these efforts in every way, and to remove the distrust that still lingers in the hearts of some native rulers. We must however be just as well as generous. Refractory rulers who reject our advice, or attempt to increase their armaments in defiance of treaties, must be brought to book at once, not only in our own interests, but in those of other native princes also.

WITH regard to Russia's progress in Central Asia, Mr. Bourke speaks like a shrewd and cool-headed observer, who sees no cause for complaint or rash alarm in the measures which a great rival power is taking to protect its own subjects and extend its trade. He holds however that the best way to guard against possible danger from that quarter is to maintain a close and friendly connection with outlying States like Kabul, Khelat, and Yarkand, the walls and outworks, as it were, of our Indian fortress. By so doing, we should "in a few years make those countries so strong, so powerful, so friendly, that the most ultra Russophobic would feel secure and lie down in peace." Such a policy however is easier to recommend than to carry out, unless we are prepared in the last resort to interfere in the domestic quarrels of these outlying States. It would perhaps be less difficult to follow up Mr. Bourke's suggestion about warning Russia once for all off any evil designs against these States by plainly telling her that we have taken them under our protection. It would cost a great nation, such as we still claim to be, nothing but a sheet of paper and a few firm words to assure our Northern rival that any attack on these countries would be held as an attack on India herself. Have our statesmen the courage to utter those few words, and would it greatly matter in the long run if they did?

ON Friday night a very interesting display of photographs illustrating the architectural wealth of Southern India was to be seen at the lecture-room of the Society of Arts. The display in question reflects no small credit on the skill and pains with which Captain Lyon has succeeded in making us realise the beauty, richness, and grandeur of the temples he set himself to reproduce.

THE ZANZIBAR MISSION.

[COMMUNICATED.]

THOSE who recollect the speeches at the Mansion-house, the dinner given by the Royal Geographical Society, and the "tall talk" generally throughout the land, that preceded the departure of the Mission, will not be at all surprised to hear that Sir Bartle Frere and suite halted at Rome on their way to Brindisi. The reception of the Chief of the Mission by the King of Italy is quite in keeping with the flourish of trumpets that proclaimed our intention to suppress the slave trade on the East Coast of Africa. As the British Lion had roused himself, and fairly roared at the iniquities of the slave trade—the horrors of which have, by-the-by, been perfectly well known for many years past—it is as well that all the world should know that he is up and doing. Hence, we presume, the appearance of the Mission in the "Eternal City." The worst of all this notoriety is that the suppression of the slave trade is not yet a fait accompli. It is just possible we may fail in doing what we have so loudly proclaimed it is our intention to do. But whether we succeed or fail, it is quite certain that the Indian taxpayer, who, no doubt, will have to pay the lion's share of the bill, will ask, when he reads of Sir Bartle Frere's adventures in Rome, "que diable allait-il faire dans cette galère?"

THE PANTHAYS OF YUNAN.

If the reports which find their way to this country from Calcutta are not mere inventions of interested speculators, the Chinese are just now turning the tables on their Mohammedan supplanters in Yunan. A year ago it seemed as if nothing were less likely than the reinstatement of Manchu rule in the southwestern corner of the old Celestial Empire. For some years past the success of the Panthays, as the Mohammedans of Yunan are called, had been steady enough to encourage the hope of ere long opening up to British enterprise a safe and profitable trade-route from India to Western China, through the Panthay districts of Momein and Talifu. It was only the other day that Mr. Cooper, the well-known traveller through Western China, set out in company with Prince Hassan, son of the Panthay ruler at Talifu, to renew his former researches from the side of British Burmah. Even before his departure however, we began to hear of events unfavourable to the Panthay cause; and the recent telegram from Calcutta imparts to those rumours a yet more significant shape. If we could only be sure of their trustworthy origin, it would certainly seem as though the Chinese were steadily recovering the ground they had lost some twelve or thirteen years ago. The defeat of the Panthays in northern Yunan appears to have been followed up by the capture of Talifu, the Panthay capital, and the siege of Momein itself, the city which Major Sladen failed to reach at the end of his exploring journey from Bhámo. That these tidings were believed in British Burmah may be gathered from the halt made by Prince Hassan's party at Rangoon on their journey homewards. If the statements of the telegram be true, their halt, or at least that of Mr. Cooper, will have to be indefinitely prolonged; and the establishment of inland trade between India and China must still wait upon an unknown and perhaps distant future. In the East however the wheel of fortune is wont to turn round very quickly, and the chapter of accidents teems with sudden changes and startling contrasts. The king of to-day may be a captive or a beggar to-morrow; and the disasters which have just befallen the Panthays may soon, for all we know, be wiped out by successes equally important and surprising. It is not the first time that their cause has suffered what seemed for the moment a fatal check. The year 1856 was marked by the wholesale butchery of many thousand Mohammedans in Yunan-fu and other parts of Yunan province. But that year also witnessed a great uprising of the proscribed people under their leader, Tu-Wensiu, followed by the capture and successful defence of his future capital, Talifu.

The story of the Panthay revolt has lately been told by the Secretary of the English Legation in China in the pages of Fraser's Magazine, and by M. de Carné, whose travels in Indo-China and the Chinese Empire on a mission of exploration ordered by the French Government have just appeared in an English translation.* After a long voyage up the Mekong or Cambodia river from French Cochin China, M. de Carné pursued his way by land, through Burmah and the province of Yunan, to the Yang-tse River near Suchu-foo, the northernmost boundary of Yunan itself, which is here divided from the great and wealthy province of Sze-Chuen. To Talifu, on the upper course of the Mekong river, he paid a passing visit, but after some rough treatment from the soldiers of the Panthay Sultan and threatening messages from that potentate himself, he and his party were glad to escape with their lives from the city they had once longed to enter. Possibly the Sultan had been misinformed as to the object of their visit; but anyhow they were bidden to depart with all speed whence they had come, lest a worse fate should befall them. M. de Carné describes the Panthay ruler as "a sanguinary and lascivious tyrant," who reigns by terror and lives in perpetual fear behind the ramparts of his citadel, with two loaded cannons at his hall door, and a trick of putting summarily to death all who offend him or arouse his suspicions. The writer in Fraser on the other hand depicts him as almost a model ruler of a contented people, remarkable for his wise tolerance of all religious creeds, and for the care with which he studies the feelings and habits of his numerous Chinese subjects. Without attempting to reconcile the two accounts, it is easy to see how the Frenchman's circumstances may have led him to exaggerate the darker traits of the Sultan's character, while the Englishman may have dwelt a little too fondly on its brighter side. The Mohammedans, who form about a fourth of the whole population of Yunan, appear to have sprung, in part at least, from the Mussulman followers whom Kublai Khan led from Central Asia to the conquest of Cathay in the thirteenth century, and who afterwards remained to garrison Yunan. These appear to have been mostly natives of Bokhara, and therefore Turks; but for centuries before that bodies of Arabs had probably found their way thither, and Panthay tradition points to Persia as another source of Mohammedan settlements in the same province. Although neither Persian nor Arabic is now spoken by the Panthays, the Korán in Arabic only is still read and expounded by their priests. They have no objection to wine, but rigidly abstain from pork and tobacco; the latter circumstance being held by them to prove the fact of their having separated from the parent stock before smoking was introduced into Western Asia.

According to the writer in Fraser the first conflict between the Chinese and Mussulmans in Yunan broke out in 1845 in the southern district of Yung-chang, where in the days of Marco Polo not a "Saracen," as he called all followers of the Prophet, was to be seen. In that year however the chief city of that district contained several thousand Mussulmans, who roused the jealousy of their fellow citizens by their superior wealth and the success of their young men in the public examinations. A series of insults were crowned by the setting up of stalls for the sale of pork in front of the city mosque. The riot that ensued ended in a general massacre of the Mohammedans. Among the survivors was Tu-Wensiu, who carried the complaints of his fellow sufferers to the foot of the Imperial throne. The Emperor heard his prayer and issued an edict which his officers were bribed to disregard. Tu-Wensiu and his friends retired into the neighbouring hills, where for the next ten years they seem to have dwelt among the Shans. In 1856 however a furious conflict broke out between Chinese and Mohammedans among the silver mines of Nangan-chow, and the former were driven out of the field. A bloody riot happened soon afterwards in the city of Yunan-fu. Which side began it, we cannot tell for certain. According to M. de Carné the Mussulmans waxed insolent, refused to pay taxes, "killed all the swine in the name of the Prophet, and violated the young women in that of Allah." They also tried to "assassinate all the Chinese mandarins in Yunan-Sen at once." This led to a plan for the wholesale massacre of all the Panthays in Yunan. According to the French traveller only a few hundred Mohammedans were killed in this way, before the remainder rose upon their would-be murderers. The writer in Fraser however describes the work of butchery as "almost rivalling in atrocity and extent the massacre of St. Bartholomew;" fourteen thousand having been slaughtered in Yunan-fu alone, besides some sixteen thousand in other places. Great or small, the massacre drove the Mohammedans everywhere into open revolt, and Tu-Wensiu became the leader of a movement which in a few years left him master of nearly all Yunan, including one of its chief cities, Talifu. The mountaineers of Kwei-chow on the eastern frontier made common cause with him, and his armies were largely recruited with the Chinese of his own province. With their aid in 1868 he laid siege to Yunan-fu itself, but disunion in his ranks compelled him in 1869 to fall back. Next year however he had pushed his conquests to Chennan and Yow-chow, and up to the end of last year he bade fair to retain all that he had won. Since then however fortune seems to have played him false, and at this moment, if all we hear be true, the young Panthay kingdom is tottering to its fall.

"IS THERE NOT A CAUSE?"

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—The above is the heading of an appeal of the Church Missionary Society, with special reference to Friday next, the day of prayer for an increase of missionary labourers.

The Archbishops and Bishops of the English Church have, I believe, approved of the subject of the prayers of the nation on that day; and in India the necessity is admitted of having missionaries very carefully trained, in order that they may be enabled to confute the errors of infidel Europeans and of zealous Roman Catholics, as well as the false doctrines of Mahommed and the superstitions of Hindoos.

But nothing can be done without pure translations of the Bible. The cause of the failures of Protestant missionaries in India is the imperfection of the existing translations. Convocation has already induced the English nation to revise the translation into English. Could its energies be exercised to better advantage than in petitioning her Most Gracious Majesty to order the revision of the translation of the Holy Scriptures into Hindoo?—Your obedient servant, RUSSIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—It is singular that no English editor seems to suppose it possible Russia can injure us in India, because of the apparent impossibility of moving an army so far from its base.

The duty of Russia is to conquer every inch of ground possible, following out blindly the advice of Peter the Great, who, had he lived in the present day, might have advised his country being turned into a net work of rail-roads and fields of corn, instead of its Government trying to seize the whole world by a gradual and diplomatic process.

The London papers harp on the love Russia possesses in insisting on the Asiatic nations releasing captured Russians from slavery. This subject touches the British heart. It is tickled and it yields, but its love blinds its judgment.

That fine fellow Sir Richmond Shakespeare, after his ride from Herat at forty miles a day for forty days, accompanied by a small mounted escort, collected all the Russian subjects en route, and delivered them to the Russian authorities to obviate the advance from the Caspian. He then went on to St. Petersburg, thinking that at least the Emperor would make him a Duke. As it was, the gentleman with the mild eyes scarcely thanked him for his services, and left him unrewarded.

What can be more convincing than that the retention of Russians in Asiatic slavery is the merest excuse for the gradual advance the Government has been long making towards India?

John Bull feels keenly for a slave, and lets his secret enemy approach his dominions stealthily.

For general purposes of civilisation to be given to all the hordes between the Caspian and Peshwar, as well as for the advancement of trade, perhaps Russia is more competent than any other nation, but will she be satisfied with extending these blessings. Why has she so often crossed the Balkan to worry the Sick Man? Why crept on step by step from the Caspian towards us? Why seized a large slice of territory belonging to China?

Russia is entirely Asiatic in her thoughts, feelings, and action. She creeps along like a rat or a mole; and, when arms are spoken of, back she goes into her hole. And she would have done so in the case of the Crimea, but that Lord Aberdeen told her that we would not go to war; so she what we called "tried it on," and the British people set Lord Aberdeen on one side.

During the days of Sir Stratford Canning at Constantinople he withstood Russian intrigues by his clearness of intellect and honesty of purpose. They plotted all night when he was asleep, and when he awoke he swept everything away, as pawns off a chessboard.

India will never be attacked by force of Russian arms.

In approaching Cabul, the way will be made easy for its capture by setting one party against the other. This conquest having been perfected, Russian emissaries will descend to Peshawur, and so on. Selling blankets worth eighteen shillings for ten, and telling the excitable Asiatic what a noble creature the Russian Emperor is—kind-hearted, considerate, desirous of civilisation, peace, increase of trade, diminution of taxation; while the English are unjust, avaricious, brutal.

Will it be wondered at that the Asiatic, under such circumstances, will like to have a change; and he will try to effect it by cutting off our provisions, burning our barracks, poisoning our wells—hating us for not allowing rich and high-caste men to trample on those beneath them in wealth and social position, and despising us for possessing an equality of law which is totally unsuitable for people accustomed to exist solely on despotism.

We are such utter fools that, when any one of the above incentives to change of Government takes place, we shall look to Russia as the very last place in the world from whence our miseries have arisen. I fancy if a sensible Englishman was to arise and say, "I know Russia is at the bottom of it," he would see Russia in imagery in a corner, with downcast eyes and meek countenance, saying, "What have I done?"

I have pointed out the only way in which Russia can eventually conquer India. Yet such an idea never seems to have entered into the mind of even the most intelligent of our writers.

Prince Alexis Soltykoff was a great friend of mine; an astute Russian, who was everlastingly careering over India. He went to Simla. He was an accomplished gentleman; he listened and reported faithfully the feeling of Anglo-Indian society to his Government. He was one of those men whom Russia employs so successfully, because he never carried a letter of introduction; by that means, in addition to his talents, he never sacrificed his country.

In 1843, when the Army of Reserve collected at Ferozepore to welcome Pollock, Nott, and Sale, on their return from Cabul, Lord Ellenborough would not invite Soltykoff to join in the fun, and Sir George Clerk discovered that the Prince was every night in the Sikh camp, a place where, had you and I been found, it would have been with minus a head in a moment.

What was the Prince doing there I wonder? Was he in search of amendments for civilisation and the extension of commerce?

Let us do away with such nonsense. He complained to me that Lord Ellenborough taxed him with being a spy, and therefore showed his ignorance of Russian diplomacy in supposing a man of his rank could be so employed. Lord Ellenborough refused to receive him because he was not accredited by the Russian Emperor, while the Prussian von Orlich was so by his Government.

Lord Northbrook is quite right to stand and look at his frontier, for he can do but little more, except to do what has been manifestly neglected; finish the break in the rail which exists between Mooltan and Lahore, and between that latter place and Peshawar; to keep on terms of amity with Cabul; to be just and honest in all his acts; and then let the Russians and our dark friends do their worst when the time comes for action.—Yours faithfully,
G. WALTON.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—One of the favourable results of the Indian Finance Committee has been to inspire greater caution into the Government in sanctioning expenditure on those public works in India which are designated as Reproductive works. It will be remembered that the evidence obtained by that Committee in June and July last went to show that the estimates submitted by the Public Works Department had, as a rule, turned out to be very incorrect. For example, the Godavery Works had cost nearly three times the amount of the estimate on which their construction had been authorised, and were still incomplete and unproductive. The Orissa Canals were estimated to return £400,000 from irrigation alone, viz., five shillings an acre on 1,600,000 acres; but before even the final sanction for the prosecution of the works had been received, the estimated rate of five shillings was found to be much too high, and was reduced to two shillings, whereby the estimated annual return was reduced by no smaller a sum than £240,000.

The effect of the discovery of these errors is shown in the recent despatch of the Secretary of State, withholding his sanction for the construction of the proposed Carwar Railway. The language used in this despatch, which is dated the 14th August last, is very different from that unreserved and confident reliance with which the completion of the Orissa Canals had been authorised. His Grace thinks that "extreme caution must be exercised at present in entering upon projects involving a large expenditure. . . . and before the construction of the line is undertaken, it becomes a matter of the first importance that its commercial prospects should be made the subject of the most careful and searching inquiry that is possible."

Let us hope that the wanton extravagance which has of late years characterised the Public Works Department will now receive some check. This is the more necessary that, hitherto, none of the works in India constructed by the British Government has earned enough to cover the interest payable on the capital borrowed for its construction. The railroads are leaving annually a loss of about one-and-a-half million sterling, which, together with the losses arising from the irrigation works, has to be made good by increased taxation; and as the increased taxation of late years has already created widespread discontent, it is very fortunate that Government have turned a new leaf and intend to be more cautious how they sanction the expenditure of public money on commercial enterprises, so many of which have turned out unsound.

OVERWORK.

The Indian Mirror is not aware how far a due regulation of diet can solve the problem. But we know that Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen, who is a strict vegetarian, went through an amount of work, while in England, which struck many of his English friends. Here certainly diet had very little to do with the work. He had to suffer for it, it is true; but we believe he would have suffered even if he had not been a vegetarian. The real question is whether any amount of animal diet can save such eminent men as Pundit Ishwara Chunder Vidyasagar, Baboo Debendro Nath Tagore, Baboo Rajendro Lala Mitra, the Honourable Dwarka Nath Mitter and Dr. Mohendro Lal Sircar from premature intellectual decay. . . . We think there is one essential element of work which should not be lost sight of, and that element is rest. As we have said there is no lack of work in India, only that that work presses too heavily on the shoulders at the last. If our eminent men think of taking say, a day's repose after a week's labour of love, we think they can be spared longer to the country. Work, incessant work, day and night, is fatal, and Mr. Justice Willes' death shows that it may be productive of more melancholy consequences. A short repose every now and then will recruit the health, as it will restore peace and strength to the mind. There is a kind of intoxication in work which tempts young men to be at it incessantly. Nothing can be a greater mistake than this. One moment spent in rest will prolong a life precious to the country, and no consideration ought to interfere with this repose. The point we have taken up is a very interesting one for this country at least, and we hope our medical friends will devote to it that amount of attention which it so richly deserves.

RUSSIA IN CENTRAL ASIA.

The Englishman has no doubt that every advance of Russia towards our Indian frontiers, at the same time that it renders an attack by her on those frontiers easier and more probable, also renders her more accessible to attack from us. The chances of conflict are, doubtless, increased, but it may well be questioned whether the chances of Russian success are rendered greater. The Bombay Gazette confines itself to dwelling on the fresh importance acquired by the question from Russia's new advances, and to combating the arguments of those who contend that a conflict could not take place, without pronouncing any decided opinion as to its probable issue. Let us consider how the latter question is influenced by the Russian advance. So far as concerns increased proximity alone, the gain to either side seems to be the same. But it must not be forgotten that, whereas the additional proximity would, in the case of Russia, be gained at the expense of solidity, to England it would be a gift conferred upon her gratuitously by her rival. Every mile that Russia advances not only takes her further from her base, but adds to the internal elements of danger which a conflict would develop into activity. Our base is unaltered; and whatever such elements of danger exist in our case, remain, quantitatively at least, the same. This is a most important consideration, and one that points very distinctly to the wisdom of our present policy of not advancing to meet Russia half-way. On the other hand, it does not point to a policy of absolute inactivity; but leaves us free to strengthen ourselves within existing limits, to fortify ourselves by alliances, and to eliminate, as far as possible, the seeds of internal danger.

THE SLAVE TRADE IN ZANZIBAR.

The Bombay Gazette declares that the more it learns in regard to the state of matters at Zanzibar and the neighbouring coast, the more its astonishment is roused and the more inclined it is to ask what the Bombay Government and the Political Agents at Zanzibar have been doing for many years. As regards the latter there is but one explanation to be found in the minds of our Indian subjects in East Africa. It is the ordinary explanation which they have for explaining the conduct of weak-minded or wrong-hearted English officials who have to do with native States in the East, and in applying which they are more often wrong than right. The slaves which are purchased at Zanzibar, and at various places on the East coast of Africa, in order to be sent to Arabia are often embarked under the pretence that they are to be taken to certain ports or islands along the line of coast on which domestic slaves may be moved in accordance with our treaty with the Sultan of Zanzibar or rather with the Imam of Muscat. But instead of being conveyed to such places they are carried to Arabia, where they are openly sold. This mode of exporting slaves to Arabia has been carried on for a long time, and, it is alleged, with the connivance of the Sultan and of his officers.

However it may be as regards the Sultan of Zanzibar, some connivance on the part of his officers must be necessary in order to such a traffic being carried on in the way it is. It would be a very good thing if we could get Ludha Jairam questioned on this subject, and we trust that Sir Bartle Frere will lose no time in inquiring after that modest gentleman. We should also like to know something more about this fee of two dollars per head which is levied upon the removal of slaves. It is not very much to charge for the liberty of taking a negro to Arabia or elsewhere in order to sell him as a slave; but it is obvious that it would be a very exorbitant tax on the mere removal from place to place in the Zanzibar dominions of domestic slaves. We understand that though so many slaves are allowed to go out of Zanzibar, evidently in order to be sold in foreign countries, yet when this fee of two dollars per cabut is not paid upon them, no difficulty is experienced by the authorities in seizing them and bringing them back to Zanzibar, and in punishing the slave traders. About four months ago a large number of slaves with their owners were captured and brought back to Zanzibar on account of not having paid this fee. The owners were confined for a few days, and then they were liberated and allowed to dispose of their slaves in Zanzibar only. It is also asserted that some of the buggalows belonging to the dealers in slaves sail under the French flag. The nacodas of these vessels hire negro residents of Zanzibar and take them to the French consulate to be articulated as seamen on board of their respective buggalows. These negroes, according to their instructions, articulate themselves, under assumed names, and the nacodas receive certificates accordingly from the French Consul. But when the buggalow is about to sail, slaves are put on board of it in place of a certain number of the fraudulently articulated seamen, and are thus conveyed to Arabia for sale. And if the buggalow is overhauled by our cruisers at sea, the fraudulently obtained certificates are shown and thus enquiry is stopped. The tricks of slave dealers are endless, and it is most desirable to cut at the root of the accursed traffic.

DEATH OF CAPTAIN ROSE.—The Mofussilite announces the death of another old Indian, Honorary Captain F. Rose, Assistant Engineer, Public Works Department, at Meerut, who succumbed to an attack of apoplexy on the 6th instant. He was in his seventieth year, and a great favourite in the station.—Indian Daily News, Nov. 14.

NEWS FROM YARKAND.—A former servant of the Yakub Khan Begi gives the following account of his master's earlier doings, and of the present mode of Government of the Russians in Central Asia, in which among some inaccuracies a few striking facts are disclosed. "It is now more than five years ago that the Russian army appeared on the frontiers of Yarkand. Yakub Shah was then at Kal, and was Governor of that place alone on behalf of Khudayar Khan, the ruler of Khokand (Yakub Shah being his title). When the Russians approached Kal, one "Triffel," a Russian General, came to Yakub, and offered to buy Kal. Also that the Russians would allow him to conquer Yarkand for himself, if he assisted them in annexing Khokand. This agreement was accordingly made, and Yakub sold Kal to the Russian, Triffel, for Rs. 410,000. Then he fled to seek refuge (ostensibly) with the Khan of Khokand. After six months the Russian sent for Yakub Shah, and consulted with him about the conquest of Khokand, which is easily attacked from Khaltshuk (Kal)? where roads concentrate from all directions. In consequence of the advice of Yakub, the Russians have a strong hold on Khokand. At that time the Russians had no immediate intentions against Yarkand, because it was then only a dependency of Khokand, and therefore Khokand had to be reduced to a state of weakness first. In the meanwhile, Yakub Shah took Yarkand, and called himself Yakub Beg. The Russians conquering Khokand (this is not quite correct, Khokand is a feudatory under Khudayar Khan), established cantonments at Kata Kurgan, and prepared for their attack on Samarcand and Bukharo. Yakub Beg on that occasion gave them every assistance in his power (this is incorrect). He received khilats from the Russians, and returned to Yarkand, where he doubled his army, and fighting his smaller neighbours or provinces without rulers annexed them with ease. Then he called himself Yakub Shah, and by much oppression amassed a good deal of wealth, and an army of the three branches numbering nearly 70,000 fighting men. This year the Russians have attacked him on three occasions, and taken a few cities from him. When I left Yarkand there were great preparations for a battle, as the Russians and Yakub had become great enemies. Yakub Shah is not an opponent to be despised, but has been much disappointed in his expectations of help from the Maharaja of Kashmir, whose Envoy is at Kal, and making great friends with the Russians. The Maharaja keeps up a correspondence full of flattery on his side with the Russian Governor. Khokand, Samarcand, Kata, Kurgan, and Kal have been fixed upon by the Russians as places for large charitable dispensaries. Many Mohammedans have been appointed to places of honour under the Russians, and young Yarkandis are especially encouraged by the Russian Governor, who sees all applicants. The subjects, however, complain greatly of Russian tyranny, and are leaving their homes. The Russian soldiers go after the wives of respectable people, and force themselves on the Mohammedans at meals, &c. Complaints are not attended to. The petty Governors are themselves Mussulmans under the Russians, but they can or will do nothing.

STATION TALK.

NAGPORE, Nov. 15.—Great preparations are being made for the reception of the Viceroy and Governor-General. Private dwellings and public buildings white-washed, roads repaired, hedges trimmed, and compounds and drainages cleared of filth, &c. I believe money is being collected amongst the many wealthy native gentlemen residing in the city of Nagpore, with a view to have some fireworks during his Excellency's stay at this station. The Chief Commissioner of these provinces intends having a grand dinner on the day of his Excellency's arrival, and Mr. Pedder, our worthy Commissioner, a similar one—if not better—at Kamptee, on the 29th. The Executive Engineer in charge of the Nagpore division has received instructions for the preparation of triumphal arches, and he has, we are informed, engaged one Mr. Morrone for the business. This gentleman was also engaged for the same purpose on the occasion of the late Viceroy's visit to this station. Probably an arch will be made over the G. I. P. Railway bridge near the post-office, and another over the gateway leading to the Residency. The railway station will also be decorated with all the neatness possible. Many editorials on the subject of public offices being closed have appeared in the Times of India. When the officers in Bombay have been instructed to observe the days of his Excellency's stay as holidays, it is hoped that the same privilege shall be extended to the public offices at this station, to enable the many officials to show their respect and loyalty by their presence at the station on the day of his Excellency's arrival, and that of his departure. For the past two years or so this station has been crammed with native beggars; no one knows from where they have come. On Sundays, roads and houses are patrolled over throughout the day, notwithstanding the endeavours of the police to keep them away. They are really a great nuisance. There is an asylum for them here, but they do not seem to like going there, although the sanitary officer who is in charge of it provides them with all the common necessities of life. The reason why I characterise them as a nuisance is that many knock about in a state of nudity. Not long ago I was informed by one of them that a poor deformed boy was taken for alms to some gentleman's house, and one of his daughters fell into a fit of convulsions on seeing the boy. This circumstance originated the orders to the police to keep the civil lines clear of them. The Nagpore Volunteer Corps have commenced their annual ball practice. The number that at present attend is rather small. The corps is not at all well officered; this is a great desideratum. Mr. Morris, Chief Commissioner, C.P., returned yesterday from his visit to the Werrora Colliery. While the train in which he was travelling was at Boree, a salute of eleven guns from the fort intimated to the public his coming into the station.—Times of India Correspondent.

PESHAWUR, Nov. 18.—The European troops are at last beginning to return to cantonments. The 8th R.A., under command of Major Stone, come in to-day from the cholera camp at Daordzai, and the two detachments of H.M.'s 55th Regiment on the 11th and 12th. The 6th Regiment do not return at present. The commander-in-chief is not expected here until after the 20th inst. Two or three doing duty lieutenant-colonels at this station have received intimation from Government that agreeable to certain paragraphs of his Grace the Duke of Argyll's Despatch of recent date, their services in this country are dispensed with, and they are politely requested to go home and live on £1 per diem, so the dreaded bombshell has fallen at last, and it seems as if the Government were determined to carry out these compulsory retirements with a high hand and to the fullest extent possible.—Punjab Times Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

RAILWAYS.—On and from the 21st instant the Byramghat branch of the Oudh and Rohilkund Railway was to be opened for public traffic.

DEATH OF MR. MARTIN.—The news of the death of Mr. R. L. Martin, Inspector of Schools, last Sunday, will be received with regret in nearly every part of Bengal. The official experience of the deceased had rendered him invaluable to the Government, who will supply his place with difficulty, while his personal friends will not soon forget his cheery good-nature and genial spirit.—Englishman, Nov. 9.

JAIPUR.—An Industrial Exhibition is to be held at Jaipur during the last week of the present year, at which only articles produced and manufactured within the Jaipur territory will be allowed to compete for the prizes offered by the Maharajah. In addition, however, the Maharajah has requested all residents in the State, not manufacturers and artificers, to lend to the exhibition specimens in their possession of articles of foreign production. All articles exhibited for competition may be sold if the owner wishes, and the Maharajah will purchase any specimens worthy of special notice for the public museum of the city.—National Paper, Nov. 6.

ACCIDENTAL DEATH.—We learn from Indian Public Opinion that a brief telegram was received on the 18th Nov. in Lahore to the effect that Major R. H. Wall, District Superintendent of Police, Mozuffergurb, had shot his orderly Hakeem Ali, dead that morning with a revolver. Full particulars have not yet been received here, but we understand that the Deputy Commissioner has officially reported the occurrence as having been accidental.

RAILWAYS.—An inspection of the new line from Lucknow to Fyzabad (Oudh) was made some days ago by Captain de Bourbel, R.E., Consulting Engineer, Mr. Hendersteal, Officiating Chief Engineer of the Oudh and Rohilkund Railway, and other officials, who travelled in a saloon carriage attached to the train. It is expected that the line will be opened to goods and passengers about 15th December, when a large increase in the receipts may be looked for. The extensions beyond Lucknow have not hitherto touched any place of important population or trade.

THE CALCUTTA TRAMWAY.—For the last five or six days two riding carriages and a goods wagon have been placed on this tramway near the Circular Road. As far as we could ascertain, the Municipality intend running second and third-class carriages only for the present. These, which are built on much the same principle as railway carriages, are very roomy and comfortable. As an experimental trip a third-class carriage with thirty natives in it was drawn by a couple of horses some time in the middle of last week as far as Amherst-street or Wellington-street, and back again.—Englishman, Nov. 11.

FAILURE OF QUININE IN SOME FEVERS.—Referring to the Burdwan fever, a writer in the Indian Medical Gazette says:—There can be no doubt as to the relapsing nature of the fever, and the failure of quinine in affecting a cure. Quinine only relieves for the time, but never cures. During my service in the district of Burdwan, at least 10,000 fever cases came under my observation; but I do not remember a single case in which quinine proved successful. Indeed, I firmly believe that no medicine in the world can cure the fever patients of Burdwan if they remain under the same malarious atmosphere as they are now doing. Sanitary improvement is the only means by which the people of fever-stricken districts can be saved.

EXCHANGE OF LAND.—The long contemplated exchange of land in the Jhansie district between Sindhia and the British Government is likely to be soon effected. The fragment is per se insignificant, but the road from Jhansie to Lallutpore will, by the transfer of the proposed strip, lie partly through native territory. With regard to this exchange, a good point is made by those who do not believe that our Government is so odious to the people as some would pretend. On hearing of the proposed transfer, the inhabitants of the piece of land which would come under Sindhia (and his twelve annas in the rupee assessment) petitioned that they might be allowed to remain subjects of the Queen.—Pioneer.

RAILWAY TRAVELLERS.—A committee has been appointed by the Punjab Government to inquire into the alleged grievances of the native traveling public on the Punjab railways, and to make suggestions regarding the improvement of both passenger and goods traffic. The committee, which consists of Mr. T. W. Smyth, Colonel Hall, Mr. Francis Halsey, Muhamad Shah, and Rai Kalian Singh of Amritsar, and Diwan Baijnath of Lahore, will sit at Lahore and Amritsar, and has power to call any witnesses whose opinion it may wish to hear. The Lieutenant-Governor has urged that the suggestion of the committee be practical and such as can be adopted, and since all the gentlemen selected are known to possess sound practical sense, it may fairly be hoped that much good may result from the labours of the committee.—Punjab Times, Nov. 12.

THE NEW COMIC PAPER.—We have received the first number of the Indian Charivari, and can fairly speak of it as being, for a first number, a very creditable production. The illustrations, being lithographed, are of course not equal in finish to the exquisite wood engravings which stud the pages of the English comic papers; but two of them—the cartoon and the picture facing it—are exceptionally good. In the letter-press the editor has skilfully managed to steer clear of personalities—the rock on which so many satirical journals in this country have gone to pieces; and although there is nothing in it remarkably brilliant, there is nothing vapid or "atrocious." We trust that success will attend Colonel Percy Windham, and that the Indian Charivari will soon number, as it promises to deserve to do, its thousands of subscribers. The first number of any journal is hardly a fair subject of criticism, and we confidently expect the second to show a great improvement.—Times of India.

THE BARDWAN FEVER.—We are informed that the Bardwan Fever has extended to Midnapore, Beerbhoom, Moorsheadabad and Bankoorah. It seems to be specially severe in Beerbhoom and has already counted its victims by thousands. Our readers doubtless know that the last of these districts was one of the healthiest in Bengal, was considered indeed to have the finest climate on this side of Behar, and was often visited by invalids to recruit their strength. It is now fast becoming as unhealthy as any of the lower districts. Last year the fever appeared in the villages on the extreme east of the district bordering on Bardwan, about the month of October, and soon spread to neighbouring villages, infecting the country round for the distance of ten miles. This year it appears to have broken out in August, and to have rapidly spread over the eastern half of the district; now it is said to be extending westwards, and in fact to have appeared in the sudder station of Sooree. The mortality has not hitherto been great, but it is daily increasing, and will not, it is believed, be at its height before the end of the year. The Magistrate and Civil Surgeon have done all in their power to relieve the poor sufferers; the latter has visited the affected places and has distributed his pills and powders in a way that we are told would do the authorities good to see. It is said to be really pitiful to behold the pale sickly and famished people flock round the "Doctor Sahib's" patkee begging for quinine and fever medicine. The sickness in some parts is very bad indeed, and those among the people who can afford it are removing to other localities. The native quacks have left their homes and fled elsewhere and have been replaced by what are called "Quinine Doctors." We believe that the Government has done little or nothing to afford aid to the fever-stricken people in this district, every available medical man having been sent to Bardwan and Hooghly, and the demand far exceeds the supply. Twenty native doctors have been applied for for Beerbhoom, and it is now feared that the fever is taking an upward tendency and may visit Rajnahal and Bhagulpore before the year is over. In the neighbourhood of Serampore, Ishera, Connughur, Mahesh, &c., the distress is terrible. On the other hand it is not near so bad in Hooghly and Bardwan as it was during most of the past two years.—Friend of India.

A WATERFALL IN LUSHAI LAND.—The following extract from Captain Tanner's diary describes a visit to a wonderful waterfall, accidentally discovered by Dr. Smith, of the 7th N. I.:—"The waterfall is situated on the Kahoo (or Kowa Doong) Doong stream about 1,200 feet below Lall Shooma's village, from which it is reached by an easy bridle-path. Above the fall the Kahoo Doong is a most beautiful stream, flowing placidly between high banks close to the water's edge, with the luxuriant vegetation peculiar to these parts. From the quiet stream above the water is suddenly launched over a scarp of some fifty feet into a clear pool on a broad ledge of rock, which has been gradually worn away by the action of water to receive it. From this pool the stream then plunges over a second ledge, and falls as a sheet of spray and foam into the bottom of an immense amphitheatre of cliffs surmounted on all sides by high forest-covered mountains. The edge of the scarp, the great fissures which rend it from top to bottom, the clefts between the strata, and indeed every available nook and cranny being fringed with festoons of creepers, ferns, and orchids of every variety. The height of this second fall is 350 feet sheer drop without break, and the view from the sharp edge of the precipice looking down into the great black, rock-strewn basin below, is one of the most striking that can be imagined; and during the wet season, when there is a large flow of water, must be one of the finest waterfalls in India. From the upper to the lower fall the road is precipitous and highly dangerous to any one not accustomed to hill climbing; the difficulties of the descent being greatly increased by the tangled mass of fallen bamboos and creepers through which it is necessary to force one's way. Standing on the edge of the deep basin, which in the long course of ages has gradually been scooped out below the great cascade, and looking upwards at the descending water, an impression is created that the fall is many hundred feet higher than really is the case. The rock composing the great wall of cliffs is of very dark colour, the sombre hue being deepened by the shadow of the surrounding lofty hills, which shut out all sunlight. High up in the face of this imposing scarp, which in many places is almost reft and riven from top to bottom, huge forest trees have here and there found clefts in which to grow and thrive, receiving their moisture from numerous little miniature cascades, and from the sheets of spray from the principal fall; though they are completely dwarfed against the height of the broken dark-coloured background, yet they greatly enhance the beauty of the scene and add much to the general effect. Perhaps the most picturesque view of the fall is obtained some distance down the stream, which is of the clearest sparkling water rushing between ponderous massy boulders which have fallen from the crags above. Here the trees grow to great height, are of every variety of shade and form, and when lit up by a little sun, stand out in strong relief from the dark background; the snow-white cascade in the centre, unbroken in its entire fall of 350 feet, still remaining the chief and most beautiful feature of the picture.

STATION TALK.

BANGALORE, Nov. 13.—Since I last wrote to you Sir F. P. Haines, Commander-in-Chief of the Madras forces, has been holding levees here and reviewing the troops, European and native, in garrison. He inspected the 1-21st Fusiliers (in which, I believe, he held a captaincy during the Crimean campaign) on the 4th inst., and expressed his entire satisfaction at their appearance and efficiency. H.E. left Bangalore on the evening of the 7th for Bellary, from whence he will proceed to Kamptee and Secunderabad. The 1-21st Fusiliers take their departure for Madras on the 3rd proximo. The 89th (Princess Victoria's regiment), which relieves them, marched from Cannanore on the 4th inst., and is expected to arrive here about the end of the month. The D brigade R.R.A. and B battery left Bangalore for England via Bombay on the evening of the 7th inst., by special train. The men seemed very merry at the prospect of once more treading their native soil and breathing the free air of "home, sweet home." The G Battalion 20th Brigade R.A. marched for Kamptee on the 11th inst. Poor devils! they have a long march before them! Major-General Colin Mackenzie, C.B., of the Mysore Division, is going home shortly. He is an old resident of Bangalore, during his stay in which he has proved himself a liberal but unostentatious supporter of all deserving charitable institutions in the place. Reports from the districts are very encouraging; the corps are promising, and weather favourable.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

THE LATE COLONEL DRURY.—We have received the sad intelligence of the death, at Aden, of Colonel Alex. Drury. Colonel Drury left Madras a week or two back under urgent medical advice. The deceased officer was well known and much respected among the residents of the hills.—South of India Observer, Nov. 14.

DEATH OF MR. G. LECOT.—Mr. George Lecot, at one time a member of the well-known firm of Lecot and Company, Madras, died on Tuesday last, at his residence, Cluny Hall, in this station. The deceased resided for the last eight or nine years on the Neilgherries. His remains were interred last evening, in the centre of the nave of the new Roman Catholic Church. A large number of residents, both European and native, attended the funeral. Ootacamund has thus lost another of its old residents. The age of the deceased was sixty-five years.—Utakamund Paper, Nov. 20.

THE MARINE COURT OF INQUIRY AT MADRAS.—We see that the Board of Trade has reversed the findings of the Madras Marine Court of Inquiry, and returned the certificates which had been suspended. Captain Foreman, of the Invereskie, who was specially censured, and whose certificate was taken away, has been appointed to the command of another ship, and altogether the Marine Court is very unceremoniously dealt with by the Board. The last accounts received from Madras were that the Board of Trade had confirmed the sentences of the Marine Court.—Englishman.

COLONEL CHRISTIE.—Col. Christie, the tiger-slayer, leaves the Neilgherries in the present week for England, where he goes on furlough. Many brutes of the striped species have fallen victims to Col. Christie's gun. He leaves, however, at a time when tigers seem to be more plentiful than ever on the Neilgherries. We are ignorant as to who will be appointed to act for Col. Christie during his absence. We have heard that the post has been offered to an officer of the Madras army just returned from leave, who, however, declined it.—Utakamund Paper.

NATIVE CHRISTIANS.—The Rev. J. F. Kearns, Tinnevely, in sending in to the Madras Government certain caste returns, in connection with the census, strongly recommended that in future Native Christians should not be called upon to state their caste, in their census papers. The Government approved the suggestion and gave the necessary order. Mr. Kearns submitted that by requiring Native Christians to name caste, while in the case of converts to Mahomedanism no such requirement was made, it appeared as if Government wished in the former case to perpetuate caste.

COAL IN BURMAH.—Mr. Mark Fryer, Mining Engineer, Burmah, has discovered that coal is, to a considerable extent, associated with the strata of shale and sandstone in Moulmein. A specimen was sent for analysis to Dr. T. Oldham, who reports that the coal is made up of the following parts:—Moisture 6.8, Volatile matter 30.0, Carbon 59.2, Ash 4.0, total 100.0. It is light, brittle, and remarkably free from ash as compared with ordinary Indian coal, and will, Dr. Oldham thinks, prove a good useful fuel, if procurable in any large quantity. In the specimen sent there was scarcely a trace of sulphur, but a distinctly ferruginous tint was observed in the ashes.

ACCIDENT TO MR. ELWIN.—We are sorry to hear that Mr. R. B. Elwin, agent and manager of the Madras Railway, came rather seriously to grief yesterday morning. He was about to get into his carriage at the door of his residence when his foot slipped, and on his falling forward his hand passed through the glass window and he cut his wrist so severely that the principal artery was severed. The blood spouted out in profusion, and although immediate means were used to stop the bleeding by tying a tight bandage round the arm, a serious loss of blood was sustained. The wound was at once attended to surgically, and we hope it may not keep Mr. Elwin long hors de combat.—Madras Times, Nov. 19.

A DEPORTED VAGRANT.—Among the vagrants sent from Madras there is one William Grady, who had worked his passage from England to Bombay, as a cook, on the chance, it is alleged, of finding employment, and that failing to find it in Bombay he tramped over the Peninsula, and eventually was apprehended at Gooty. He wished to be sent to Australia, where he had relatives, but the President of the Workhouse demurred, believing that the man came out purposely to force a free passage to Australia. The Government, however, ordered the deportation to Australia, and rightly; but cannot some means be found to prevent ship-masters from discharging men, without cause in India, where there is scarcely a possibility of any such man obtaining employment?—Friend of India.

PONDICHERRY.—Pondicherry had its rebel ball on the 12th inst., and the insurgents danced till daylight did appear. The officials of the place were conspicuous by their absence, as, till M. Farron gives his permission, the officials of Pondicherry "don't dance." A "mother of a family" who goes to M. Farron's receptions, so as "not to injure her husband's prospects," tells our local French contemporary something about the "innocent games" that are substituted for the immoral dance at these gatherings. One of them called "la Poste" seems to be our old friend blind-man's buff, and the blindfolded young man who catches a young lady in the gubernatorial salons, in his efforts to find out who she is is permitted to handle her hair, her dress, and her jewels in a way that this "mere de famille" does not seem to think quite the right thing for her daughters at all events.—Madras Times, Nov. 20.

A HUNGRY TIGER.—The black panther in the People's Park has met with an untimely end. Very early on Sunday morning the animal—which, by the way, we may mention was the most magnificent specimen of a black panther that has yet been seen in Madras—was enjoying a snooze in his cage, but very incautiously had the whole of one foreleg thrust into an adjoining den occupied by a tiger and his mate. The cold morning had probably sharpened the always good appetite of the tiger, and, unable to resist the temptation, the latter seized the foreleg of the panther and tore it off at the shoulder. The agonised roars of the unfortunate brute brought the keepers and superintendent to the spot, where they saw the tiger crunching the severed limb of the panther in a corner of a den, while the maimed panther was rolling with pain and giving vent to most horrible cries in the middle of his cage. We believe that the panther was ultimately put out of its misery by strangling.—Madras Athenæum, Nov. 19.

A MILITARY BUILDING in connection with the Royal Artillery at Bangalore lately showed signs of collapse. A committee of military officers assembled at that pleasant station on the 9th September last for the purpose of reporting upon the harness-room of the Royal Artillery barracks. A portion of the wall tumbled down on the 3rd September, and it was found after examining the rest of the building that its construction was wholly defective. The material used was inferior, and the workmanship was so bad that the building was condemned and will be taken down before long. The bricks used were of rather indifferent quality, the mortar was bad, and a large quantity of sand was mixed with it, which showed that the contractor did all his best to make a large profit by his contract. During the erection of the building four officers were in charge of it, Major Mayne granted the completion certificate, and the committee think it unreasonable to blame him for the indifferent completion of the work in May 1868. We are told of the cost of the building, but it would appear that the rates allowed were very low, and that, on the "cheap and nasty principle," the Government could not expect better work. The Government have received without remark the report of the committee, but on receiving a second report from Colonel Foote of the necessity that exists for rebuilding the harness roof they will pass orders for its re-erection. The wood work of the building was very properly constructed, and that is all that can be said in its favour.—Madras Standard, Nov. 8.

THE VICEROY'S PROGRESS.

Gay doings in connection with the Viceregal visit continued up to Friday morning last, when H.E. left for Poona, where a review of the troops takes place, and there is to be a grand field day of all the troops there assembled. On Monday H.E. paid return visits to the principal native potentates, and a portion of Tuesday was also taken up in rounds of visits. In the afternoon H.E. found time to pay the Caves of Elephanta a visit. In the evening H.E., with Sir Philip Wodehouse and a brilliant staff, were present at Sir A. D. Sassoon's ball, given in honour of the Viceroy. The affair was the most brilliant of its kind which Bombay has probably ever witnessed; upwards of one thousand guests were present, including many of the principal native chiefs at present in Bombay. Early on Wednesday morning H.E. paid a visit to the School of Art, at which institution he distributed the prizes on his arrival here in April last, and from there H.E. proceeded to the Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy Benevolent Institution, and formally opened the new building which has just been completed for it. At half-past eleven a deputation of the members of the Bombay Association was received at Government House, Parrell, by his Excellency, and in the afternoon a durbar of the native chiefs and sirdars of the Bombay Presidency was held in the Investiture Tent on the Esplanade, in the presence of a large and brilliant company. The ceremony of receiving each chief and his attendant sirdars occupied some hours, and towards the end grew rather tedious. In the evening H.E. drove through the principal streets of the native town, which were brilliantly lit up and rowded with people, who received him enthusiastically. After proceeding through the town, the party drove to the Bynulla Club, where the Viceroy, H.E. Sir P. Wodehouse and a number of high officials were entertained at dinner. The first thing on Thursday morning, H.E. visited the Gun Carriage Manufactory and the Royal Arsenal, and drove from thence to the Colaba Lunatic Asylum, the whole of which he thoroughly inspected. In the evening the Maharajah Scindiah's banquet to H.E. came off in the Victoria and Albert Museum. The next morning, Friday, at eleven o'clock, H.E. with the Governor and a numerous staff left by special train for Poona, having completed the allotted week in Bombay, the citizens of which are but too sorry that the Viceregal programme has so soon been completed. H.E. will proceed from Poona to Nandgaum on the 20th, whither Sir Salar Jung, the Nizam's Minister, has proceeded to receive H.E., and to prepare for the visit to the Caves of Ellora. The Maharajahs of Scindiah and Travancore have taken their departure, and by this time next week the majority of the native potentates who have contributed by their presence and oriental splendour to the festivities of the past week will have left and Bombayites will have returned to the even tenor of their ways, which have not unnaturally been rather upset by the festivities attendant on the first official visit of a Governor-General to the city.

On Thursday afternoon last there was a garden party at Government House, Parrell. Sir Philip Wodehouse and the Hon. Mrs. Bonar Deane were present and received the visitors, and H.E. Lord Northbrook was also there, but for a short time only, probably owing to the fatigues inseparable from the laborious duties of the previous days. The company was not numerous, and after remaining for a time and walking about the grounds, enjoying the scenery and the delightfully cool air of an especially beautiful evening the visitors left.

H.E. Lord Northbrook, accompanied only by his personal staff, contrived to secure a quiet visit to Elephanta and its caves on Tuesday last. He could not help seeing Hog Island, being within a good pistol-shot of that marvel of science and financial administration, but his Lordship declined to inspect. It is said that what he has heard about this costly blunder is more than enough for him, so that, like the leading officials who ought to be responsible for its inception, he was only too glad to pass by on the other side.—Times of India, Nov. 25.

THE VICEROY AT POONA.

Nov. 24.—It must be said that the local authorities have done their utmost to welcome Lord Northbrook in a fitting manner. On Friday every station along the line from Bombay was more or less decorated in honour of the gentleman who was passing through. The smallest roadside stations had their bunches of evergreens and bits of red calico, while the larger ones, such as Kirjut, Khandalla, and Lanowlee, were dark with excess of foliage. But the triumph of station decorating was reserved for Poona, which was really remarkable. It resembled a vast greenhouse with its trees trained into beautiful arches, and its branches all hanging in graceful festoons, amidst which innumerable banners were waving. On the platform was the inevitable Turkey-red, covered here and there with rugs of more pleasing colours, and over the booking-office in large letters, were the words, "Welcome Lord Northbrook, to Poona." For the accommodation of the ladies of the station who desired to view the reception, a gallery had been erected just under the inscription, and at each end of the platform places reserved for those native inhabitants of the city, mostly Parsees, who had been privileged with places inside the station. Outside the station were the Viceroy's body guard and the 2nd Infantry Brigade, the latter composed of the 2nd Grenadiers and the 8th N.I., under the command of Colonel Barrow, while opposite them was a battery of the Royal Horse Artillery commanded by Major Rideout. The 56th Regiment furnished a complete company as a guard of honour with band and colours, Major White being in command. A large crowd of natives assembled outside the station and lined all the approaches to it.

Soon after five o'clock the Viceregal train entered the station—the engine all covered with flags and evergreens, exploding as it passed along twenty-one fog signals, which had been placed on the rails by the station-master. His Excellency on stepping out of the carriage was received in the usual fashion, but without anything approaching to enthusiasm, and was driven off to Gunesh Khind with hardly a cheer. This is attributed here to the natural stolidity of the native character. Later on a grand ball was given at Government House, at which dancing was kept up till an early hour.

Notwithstanding the fatigues of the previous day, his Excellency was stirring betimes yesterday morning. Accompanied by Mr. Lee Warner, Major Biddulph, and one or two members of his staff, his Excellency rode over from Gunesh Khind before breakfast, entering the city by Aditwar Peit and riding on to Boodwar Peit, where the party dismounted and walked through the famous palace of the Peishwa, visiting afterwards the Poona High School, the Norman School, and the Training School, spending a few minutes at each, and returning to Government House by nine o'clock.

At four o'clock yesterday afternoon H. E. the Viceroy held a levée in the Council Hall. His Excellency was accompanied by the Governor of Bombay and attended by the Commander-in-Chief and a brilliant Staff. His Excellency, who wore a plain black morning-coat and white trousers, and was distinguished from others only by the gold star which glittered on his breast, did certainly wear a tagged appearance—as if his Herculean labours of the last fortnight were beginning to tell upon his powers of endurance. But tired out or no, his Excellency made a genuflection to each of the gentlemen whose names are hereunto annexed, and afterwards rode off to inspect the Arsenal. A company of the 68th Regiment formed the guard of honour at the Council Hall, and Major Rideout's battery of Royal Horse Artillery fired a royal salute on the arrival and the departure of the Viceroy. The crowd was not a very large one, and there was no cheering.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

MURDERED FOR THE SAKE OF ORNAMENTS.—On the 3rd instant a boy of about ten years of age, named Ragoonath, belonging to one Kristnaje Ramsett Toonar, inhabitant of the village of Sassoor, was murdered for the sake of ornaments which he had on his person of the value of about five hundred rupees. It appears that some villains took the unfortunate boy away from his house to some distance beyond the village, and there they fastened his neck with a rope and strangled him, and left the dead body and went away. No clue of this atrocious deed has been yet traced by the police, but we have no doubt that they will very soon do so.—Poona Observer.

THE COTTON CROPS.—From this week's cotton crop report we learn that in Sind there is no change to notice since last week. Cotton picking in some parts of the Upper Sind districts is finished, and the out-turn is expected to be a fair one. On the Government farm in Sind the cotton will be on a higher average this season than it was last year. The range of temperature of Sind may be judged of from the following quotation from the report of Mr. W. Strachan, superintendent of cotton experiments in Sind. He writes as follows: "Fever is prevalent all round. The weather is pretty comfortable now. The night temperature for the week ending 9th inst. averages 52-4, and the maximum in the shade 92-5, while the maximum, exposed to the sun, gave an average of 158-1 Fahrenheit. Between March 23 and Sept. 14 the maximum temperature in the shade was seldom under 100 degrees." Guzerat: At Dhollera, Ahmedabad, and other places in Guzerat the reports of the condition of the cotton are still favourable, and the same may be said of the grain crops. Khandeish: The cotton crop is not expected to be so large in the Khandeish district as it promised to be at the end of September last. The yield is estimated at 12 annas or 60 lbs. per acre. The cotton area is 32 per cent. larger than last year's, the quality of the staple is above the average, and its condition is unusually good for Khandeish cotton. Southern Mahratta Country: Though the weather has not been quite so favourable, there is a reasonable anticipation of a more than usually good cotton crop in the Southern Mahratta country. The crops are generally good, and in many places far over the average. But little business has been done, the local dealers not appearing anxious to do business at present.

A WHOLE FAMILY POISONED.—On Wednesday a profound sensation was created by the intelligence that several respectable Portuguese families had been poisoned with fatal effect, and that there was no reason to doubt that a dastardly crime had been committed. It appears that on Tuesday a coolie brought a basket of cakes to a Mr. DeGa, living in Grant-road, purporting to be a present from his relative, friend, and medical attendant, Dr. Rozario. Mr. DeGa was not at home when the cakes arrived. It is a common thing among persons of this class to send presents of cake, sweetmeats, fruits, &c., from one family to another. Mr. DeGa accordingly on his return home sent a portion of the supposed present to his elder brother, who was staying with his family (temporarily) at Bandora Hill. The elder DeGa again shared his portion of the cake with a neighbour, Mr. J. D. Pereira, managing clerk of Messrs. Dallas and Lynch, attorneys of Bombay. Mr. Pereira and his aged mother died the same night. The first sharers of the cake and the person whose destruction was evidently planned, Mr. Joseph Maria DeGa, died on the Tuesday night. Emilia DeGa, deceased's sister, also partook of the cake, and suffered severely from vomiting and purging. The deceased was attacked about half an hour after dinner with incessant vomiting and pains, and continued conscious until shortly before his death, which occurred at 11.15 the same night. The inquest was adjourned (without medical evidence being called) till the 26th inst., so that, we regret to say, nothing further is known with respect to this portion of the tragedy, except that the police have not been able to find the coolie who brought the cake, nor have they, we believe, any clue to the perpetrator of the crime. Mr. A. G. DeGa, the elder brother, expired on Friday morning at three o'clock, making the fourth victim. His wife suffered much from the effects of the poison, but is now recovering, as also are the other persons attacked, and no further danger is apprehended.—Bombay Gazette, Nov. 18.

DRESS.—NEW PATROL JACKET FOR OFFICERS OF INFANTRY.

Horse Guards' G.O. 71 (officers' dress) is republished for the information of officers commanding British infantry regiments.

The serge frock, as at present worn under the authority of the Horse Guards' Dress Regulations of 1864, p. 86, will be gradually replaced, as worn out, by the patrol jacket now sanctioned.

Horse Guards' G.O. 71 (officers' dress), specially issued Aug. 21.

Her Majesty has been pleased to approve of a scarlet patrol jacket for officers of infantry.

The jacket is to be of scarlet cloth or serge, according to the climate, of the same shape and size as the blue patrol jacket, with collar of the regimental facings. The sleeve braided as the shell jacket, according to rank; scarlet shoulder strap, with a small button and the number of the regiment in gold embroidered figures, three-quarters of an inch high, and half an inch from the lower end of the strap. White cloth edging all round, except the collar, and round the shoulder strap. Scarlet lining. Field officers wear gold embroidered collar badges.

The scarlet patrol jacket is to be worn without the sash at drill, and on parade when the men are dressed in frocks.

The blue patrol jacket may be worn on regimental boards, and on fatigue, stable, or orderly duties, but not on parade. Officers of line regiments are not obliged to provide themselves with blue patrol jackets, but may wear the scarlet jacket on occasions when the blue patrol jacket is authorised to be worn.

Resolution.

Simla, Oct. 4.—Read—A letter, No. 4,047, dated Sept. 11, from the Government of Bengal, giving cover to one from the Inspector general of Hospitals, reporting the disobedience of orders and insubordination of certain supernumerary sub assistant surgeons, and recommending their dismissal from the service.

A petition addressed to the Governor general in Council by the said sub assistant surgeons, dated Sept. 19.

The resources of the medical department were and are still strained to the utmost to keep up the supply of medical subordinates for the fever districts of the Burdwan division, but yet the supply is insufficient.

2. The circumstance led his Honour the Lieut. governor of Bengal to consider that some of the passed students of sub assistant surgeon's grade, doing duty as supernumeraries at the Medical College Hospital, might be utilised with advantage to the people, and some benefit to their own professional knowledge, by being placed temporarily at the disposal of the civil surgeon of Burdwan for service there. Under the orders quoted on the margin,* these young men draw as supernumeraries, until posted to permanent appointments, Rs. 50 a-month from the date of their declaration of their willingness to serve Government, and are liable to be distributed as supernumeraries on that salary in Bengal and the North-Western Provinces as the public service may require. Of late, however, it has not been usual to send them into the interior as supernumeraries, and they have been allowed to remain attached to the Medical College Hospital, but doing really little or no actual duty till opportunities have occurred for employing them permanently.

3. The Lieutenant governor, thinking it desirable that the services of these young men should be made available, instructed the Inspector general of hospitals to revert generally to the practice of employing supernumeraries in the mofussil, and directed specially that any sent at the present time to the Burdwan districts should receive the full travelling allowances of a sub assistant surgeon if required to move about; while if any of them were entrusted with the separate charge of an endemic dispensary, he should be at once allowed the full pay of a third grade sub assistant surgeon, viz., Rs. 100 a month, though still, under the rules, a supernumerary.

4. The Inspector general accordingly issued orders on August 9, through the Principal of the Medical College, that the four supernumerary sub assistant surgeons, Troyluknath Bose, Keshub Chunder Mookerjee, Jadonath Dey, and Doorga Churn Singhee, should proceed to Burdwan and place themselves under the orders of the civil surgeon. Instead, however, of obeying, they, with all the other supernumeraries at the presidency, formed a deputation to the Inspector general, and stated their unwillingness to go to Burdwan on a salary of Rs. 50. The special conditions under which they were going to Burdwan were explained to them, and they were advised to obey first and remonstrate afterwards through the proper channel, if they found they had then any cause of complaint. On Aug. 17 the orders that had been passed were repeated, but with no other effect than to call forth from the officers named a petition addressed to the Inspector general of Hospitals direct, protesting against the action of their superiors. They were told to submit this petition through the civil surgeon of Burdwan, the officer under whose orders they had been placed.

5. The sub assistant surgeons disobeyed this order, saying that, as they had declined to go to Burdwan, they were not subordinate to the civil surgeon of that place, but to the Principal of the Medical College, and addressed a petition to that officer, in which they begged to tender their resignation of their appointments unless their petition received a favourable reply. They also wrote to the Inspector general of Hospitals, and refused to go to Burdwan until what they asked for had been granted. To give them a last opportunity of reconsidering their conduct, the Inspector general issued orders that, within twenty-four hours of the receipt of his memorandum the sub assistant surgeons should proceed to Burdwan, and, having ascertained that these orders were also disobeyed, the Inspector general of Hospitals represented the case for the orders of Government, with the recommendation that the officers concerned be dismissed the Government service, and that the fact of this dismissal be published in the Gazette of India. His Honour the Lieut. governor of Bengal has expressed his concurrence with the recommendation of the Inspector general.

6. The supernumerary sub assistant surgeons have not only, after repeated warnings, persistently refused to obey the orders of their superiors, but they have shown this insubordination at a time when medical aid to relieve their suffering fellow-countrymen in Burdwan was urgently demanded. The orders which they received were not inconsistent with the engagements into which they had entered, and H.E. the Governor general in Council, after a full consideration of all the circumstances of the case, is pleased to direct that Sub asst. surgs. Troyluknath Bose, Keshub Chunder Mookerjee, Jadonath Dey, and Doorga Churn Singhee, be dismissed the Government service. And that this order be published for general information.

By order of the Governor general of India in Council.

THE DEATH OF SIR DONALD MCLEOD.—OFFICIAL INQUIRY.

On Friday morning an official inquiry was held by Captain Tyler at the offices of the Board of Trade, Whitehall-gardens, into the cause of the recent accident to the late Sir Donald McLeod at the Gloucester-road Station of the Metropolitan District Railway, and into the circumstances attending the same. Captain Tyler was assisted by Mr. Cumberland, barrister, as legal assessor, and the Metropolitan and Metropolitan District, and London and North-Western Railway Companies were represented. Colonel Innis attended on behalf of the family of Sir Donald McLeod.

Captain Tyler, in opening the proceedings, said this was the first public inquiry which had been held under the provisions of the Railways Regulations Act of 1871, and the object was, first, to inquire into the precise circumstances which led to the death of Sir Donald McLeod; secondly, as to the means by which the accident might have been prevented, and, in connection with that subject, into the improvements which might be made for preventing similar accidents in the future.

Edward Robinson was then called. He stated that on the 27th of last month he was collecting tickets on the bridge which crosses the lines at the Gloucester-road station. A train had just arrived when the deceased gentleman came running across the bridge. Witness warned him that he was too late to catch the train, but he took no heed, and proceeded down the staircase. The witness next saw the deceased trying to open the door of one of the carriages while the train was in motion, and after proceeding about nine yards he fell between the platform and the carriage. There were no means on the bridge by which the deceased could have been prevented from getting down the staircase to the platform.

Captain Tyler stated that he had received several communications from persons who had complaints to make of the management of the line at various points, but no one who was an eye-witness of this particular accident had written to him. If any one who had seen what occurred, not being a servant of the railway company, would come forward, he should be glad to take their evidence.

Richard Batten, porter, proved that the train was in motion when the deceased tried to get into it. He had an umbrella in his hand. Some one on the platform shouted out, "Stand back, sir, you're too late," but the deceased took no notice, and after proceeding a few yards fell between the platform and the carriage.

George Morrison, a platelayer, said he assisted to pick up the deceased. He was lying a short distance in the tunnel. On his way to the hospital he made no remark.

James Hutchins, guard of the train—a London and North-Western one—said it consisted of five carriages. When he had got into his van and the train had started he heard some one shouting loudly. He looked out and saw the door of a third-class carriage open. He immediately applied the full power to the brake, brought the train to a stand, and the deceased, whom he had not seen while on the platform, was picked up from the carriage way. If he had seen the deceased trying to get into the train he should not have started it.

James Kingston, driver of the engine, said the train had got fifteen yards when he saw the deceased running down the stairs. When he got on the platform he appeared to try to open two carriage doors, and then he fell. The train was stopped as quickly as it was possible.

Francis Griffith, stoker, said immediately Kingston told him to put the break on he did so.

Edward Rose, a platelayer, said he was a passenger by the train. He heard some one cry out, "There's a man down." He looked out, but could see no one. When the train was brought to a stand the deceased was picked up.

Mr. Denne, manager of the Metropolitan District Railway, said it might happen that three trains would arrive at the Gloucester-road Station at the same time; but this was very seldom the case. He did not think if there had been more porters on the platform than there were the accident could have been prevented.

Mr. Spack, engineer of the District Railway, said they had 150 carriages, half of which were fitted with continuous footboards, and half not. The carriages attached to this particular train were not fitted with continuous foot boards. If they had been the accident might have been prevented. They Metropolitan District was now engaged in putting continuous footboards on that portion of their stock which had not got them at present.

Captain Tyler: I may here state, in order to show the importance of this subject, that from a return made to the Board of Trade it appears that during the present year thirty-four persons have been killed, and forty-four injured from falling between the carriage and the platform.

Mr. Forbes, who represented the District Company, inquired whether the return was founded upon the finding of coroners' juries, or other reports which had been made to the Board of Trade.

Captain Tyler: The return is based upon the reports of the railway companies themselves to the Board of Trade.

Mr. Forbes: Do you think these general statements are of much value unless the individual circumstances are known?

Captain Tyler: If you impugn the accuracy of the return I shall be glad to hear from you the individual circumstances.

Mr. Forbes: I do not attend here as a witness.

Mr. Myles Fenton, of the Metropolitan Line, said they had eighty-seven carriages out of one hundred and five fitted with continuous footboards. If the particular carriage into which the deceased attempted to get had had a continuous footboard the accident would have been less likely to have occurred. The whole of the body could not have got through, though the foot or leg might. He did not think a gate on the bridge would be of any service. Gates or barriers were of little use in preventing passengers attempting to reach trains. Only the other day he saw a man, assisted by two others, clamber over a gate seven feet high in order to catch a train which was in motion. He desired to state that during the last ten years the Metropolitan and Metropolitan District Companies had made it their constant study how best to ensure the safety of persons travelling on their line.

Mr. Bore, carriage superintendent of the London and North Western, said he knew no reason why all their stock should not have continuous footboards, except that all the platforms were not of the same height.

Captain Tyler: Surely some means could be found to make platforms fit footboards, and footboards fit platforms.

Mr. Bore: I think a continuous footboard often offers an inducement to persons to jump into trains when they are in motion, whereas if there were only single steps they could not make the attempt.

Captain Tyler said he would take an opportunity on Friday of visiting all the stations and seeing the platforms for himself.

The inquiry was then adjourned until Saturday, the 21st inst., at twelve o'clock.

Miscellaneous.

WILL OF THE LATE SIR DANIEL ELIOTT.—The will, with three codicils, of the late Sir Daniel Elliott, K.C.S.I., was proved on Nov. 26, by John Hutcheson Fergusson (deceased's son-in-law), and William Russell Elliott, the son, the executors, under £35,000. The bequests in the will and codicils are entirely in favour of the deceased's widow and his children and grandchildren.

MESSRS. LEGGATT AND CO.'S BANKRUPTCY.—At a meeting lately held of the creditors of the firm of Leggatt and Co., of Bombay and London, whose suspension was announced in September last, owing to the failure of Messrs. Gledstones and Co., a resolution was passed granting the partners their discharge. A similar resolution had been previously passed as regards Mr. Clement Davidson Leggatt on his separate estate.

MR. GRANT DUFF AT ELGIN.—Mr. Grant Duff, the Under-Secretary of State for India, met his constituents of the Elgin district, Morayshire, on Dec. 10, and delivered an address in which he reviewed the progress made by the Liberal party during fifteen years since he sought the suffrages of the community. The Under-Secretary for India did not, however, include India as one of the topics of his very smart lecture.

LAND MORTGAGE BANK OF INDIA.—The report of the Land Mortgage Bank of India for the past year has been issued. It states that, notwithstanding the adverse influences in operation, the directors are still hopeful that the profit and loss account will show a credit balance of between £9,000 and £10,000. All financial requirements to the end of 1873 have been fully provided for, after making the entire proceeds of the late call available at Calcutta for investment. No further call will be necessary.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULAR RAILWAY.—The report of the Great Indian Peninsular Railway Company, for the half-year ending the 30th June last, has been issued. The net profit amounted to £458,901. 9s. 10d., which shows a falling off of £18,971. 13s. 5d., compared with the corresponding period of 1871. The earnings from passenger traffic, live stock, and miscellaneous were greater last half-year by £22,278. 11s. 4d., but from goods traffic and electric telegraph they fell short of those of the corresponding six months by £40,796. 2s.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDIAN MILITARY FUNDS.—The following circular has been sent by the Director of Military Funds to the Majors of Artillery and Engineers now in England:—"By a recent decision of the Secretary of State for India in Council, regimental majors of Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, who, when serving in India, only receive pay equivalent to that formerly drawn by captains, have been granted the option of subscribing to the Military Funds either as captains or majors, on the understanding that those who elect to continue subscribing as captains will be required to pay the donation of major as well as that of lieutenant-colonel on being promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and that the widow of an officer will only be entitled to the pension of the grade in which her husband was subscribing to the fund at the period of his decease.—(Signed) T. L. SECCOMBE, Director of Military Funds India Office, Nov. 22, 1872."

AN OLD COMPANY'S OFFICER.—Last week a very interesting celebration took place in the Ayr Assembly Rooms, on the occasion of the completion of the fiftieth year of the married life of Major-General Lennox, formerly of the Hon. East India Company's Service. The company which assembled was both a numerous and a varied one, embracing the major-general and his wife, and their children to the fourth generation, besides a number of the relatives and friends. Major-General Lennox was in the service of the East India Company for the long period of forty five years. He went out to India in 1818. He took part in all the Cabul and Affghan campaigns, extending from 1838 to 1843. He was present at the capture of Ghuznee, and with his wife and daughter passed through the trying mutiny of 1857.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA.—An extraordinary general meeting of this Bank has been held at the City Terminus Hotel. The Chairman (Mr. R. Campbell) said the meeting was called to alter the day for holding the annual meeting to April 22, due provision being made for holidays; and to provide for giving three months' notice of an extraordinary general meeting (instead of seven days), so that shareholders in India would have an opportunity of being represented. Instead of the present power of voting for every share up to fifty, it was deemed better that every member should have a vote for ten or less shares, and an additional vote for every ten above the first, up to 200 shares, and then for every twenty. The maximum remuneration of the directors it was proposed to reduce from £3,000 to £2,500, the latter being the amount they at present draw. The scope of the proposed alteration was really to give Indian shareholders greater advantages and facilities for exercising a control over the affairs of the company. Mr. Wingrove seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

SERVICES OF MAJOR-GENERAL SIR GEORGE BALFOUR, M.P.—Major-General Sir George Balfour, who has been returned to Parliament in the Liberal interest as M.P. for Kincardineshire, without opposition, in the place of Mr. James Dyce Nicol, deceased, is the eldest son of the late Captain George Balfour, R.N., of Montrose, North Britain; he was born in the year 1809, and was educated at the Royal Military College, Addiscombe. He entered the Madras Artillery at the early age of sixteen, and has seen much active service in India, China, &c., both in a military and civil capacity. He acted as Assistant in the Adjutant-General's Department in 1834-35, was Consul at Shanghai in 1843-46, and subsequently Commissioner of Public Works and Inspector-General of the Ordnance at Madras, a member of the Military Finance Commission of India, and President of the Committee appointed for regulating the Finance of India. He also served in 1840-42 with the forces sent to China, where he took part in the capture of Chusan, and also at Canton, Amoy, Ningpo, &c. He became a Major-General in 1865, and after his return to England was appointed in 1868, Assistant to the Controller-in-Chief at the War-office. He was nominated a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath (Civil Division) in 1870. Sir George Balfour, who now enters Parliament for the first time, is married to a daughter of the late Mr. Joseph Hume, who, it will be remembered, was for fourteen years member for the Montrose Burghs, with which Sir George is paternally connected.

DEATH OF MR. EDWIN NORRIS.—The death of Mr. Edwin Norris, at the advanced age of seventy-seven, is announced. The deceased gentleman will be best known to posterity by the Cuneiform (Assyrian) Dictionary. Not only did he, together with Sir Henry Rawlinson, edit, under immense difficulties, the first two volumes of the great Corpus Inscriptionum of Assyrian and Babylonian cuneiform monuments in the British Museum and elsewhere—each consisting of no fewer than seventy folio plates—but he was also the first who undertook the work of compiling, out of those thousands of small fragments of cuneiform writing, primers, &c., that strewed the British Museum receptacles, the first Assyrian Dictionary. He also at various periods gave the world the results of his studies in such out-of-the-way idioms as the Fulah language, of which he wrote a grammar, as he did of the Bornu or Kapuri language. He made a Tahitian version of portions of the Bible, wrote on the "Kapurdi-Giri Rock Inscriptions," edited and translated the ancient Cornish drama, and contributed besides a number of learned papers to the Asiatic and other societies. Mr. Norris was early appointed to the India House, and afterwards became interpreter to the Foreign Office and secretary of the Asiatic Society, posts from which he retired some years ago. His great merits were well known, though people abroad seemed to appreciate them even more than did England. Thus, the University of Bonn gave him the honorary doctor's degree, which we are not aware that any of our own universities thought fit to bestow upon him.

INDIAN APPEAL.—GOFFE RISSEN GOSSAMEE v. BRINDABUN CHUNDER SIRCAR AND SHREESHCHUNDER SIRCAR.—This appeal and cross appeal, which were partly heard on a former occasion, were resumed and judgment pronounced at the rising of the Court on Dec. 10. The case was remarkable on account of the interest claimed. The legal rate of interest in India is 12 per cent., and it was stated in the proceedings that if the costs of the lower Court and of the Privy Council in a former matter in the same subject were added, the interest on such costs and the principal would make an aggregate total of 103,618 rupees, or "about six times the amount of principal originally due to him on the bond." There had been considerable litigation and much contention as to the time when interest was to be payable and whether compound interest was to be allowed. Sir J. Colville, in giving judgment, expressed the regret of their lordships that the litigation had been continued. After dwelling on the nature of the appeals before the Court, he said their lordships would humbly recommend to her Majesty that an order be made to declare that the appellant, under the order of her Majesty of Aug. 6, 1869, was entitled to 34,865 rupees, with interest at 12 per cent., from the commencement of the suit to the date of the order, with the costs in the Court below. That would ascertain the sum which at the date of the decree was given. The order would also declare that he was entitled to interest at 12 per cent. on that consolidated sum from the date of the order to the realisation, and further that he was entitled to 3,289 rupees for the costs of the former suit, and also the costs in the Indian Courts in the proceedings for execution, and to the costs of this appeal. Their lordships would remand the case to the High Court, with directions to cause execution to be issued accordingly.

ODDEH AND ROHILKUND RAILWAY (LIMITED).—The report of the directors states that on Feb. 1 last were opened the section of a main line from Lucknow to Sundela, thirty miles, and the section of the Allyghur branch from the Allyghur station of the East India Railway to Rajghat, on the Ganges, also thirty miles; on April 1 the section of the main line from Lucknow to Nawabgunge, eighteen miles; on July 15 the section of the main line from Sundela to Hurdul, thirty-three miles; on October 28 the section of the Allyghur branch from Rajghat to Chundowsee, thirty and a-half miles, thus completing the communication between this company's main line and the East Indian Railway; and on the same date the section of the main line from Chundowsee to Moorabad, twenty-seven and a-half miles. On November 1 were to be opened the branch line from Nawabgunge to Byramghat, twenty-two miles, and the section on the main line from Nawabgunge to Fyzabad, sixty-two miles; the several sections making together 253 miles, and, with the Cawnpore branch, a total of 295 miles now open and carrying traffic, out of 706 miles, the total length of the company's system of lines as at present determined. Wood fuel had been exclusively used on the Cawnpore branch on the main line with increased economy; all the wood fuel procurable in that district was taken up by the resident engineer at Rajghat-bridge for brick-burning. A plentiful supply of wood could be obtained between Rajghat and Chundowsee. The new wagons and carriages [were working most satisfactorily.] The whole of the traffic, with the exception of that conveyed by special trains, and the railway material, was carried by one up and one down train per day on each section. Much traffic could not have been expected under present circumstances, and £7.5s. 9½d. per mile per week over the lines worked in Oude, £4.19s. 9½d. over the Allyghur to Rajghat section, might be looked upon as promising well. The cost of construction of the sections above referred to was stated approximately at £886,264, including rolling stock, giving an average mileage cost of £7,385, which might be considered satisfactory. The engineer in charge of the Oude and Benares division, 269 miles, reported that on the section of the main line from Benares to Fyzabad, 122 miles, that from Fyzabad to Nawabgunge was nearly ready for opening. The capital account showed a total receipt of £3,887,254, and a total expenditure of £2,804,568, leaving a balance in cash of £292,388, and in stores of £790,297, making together £1,082,685.

THE LATE SIR DONALD M'LEOD.—On Sunday morning, Dec. 8, there was a crowded congregation in the Baptist Chapel, Allen-street, Kensington, the chapel in which the late Sir Donald Friell M'Leod was accustomed to worship, an announcement having been made that the Rev. Dr. Stoughton would preach a funeral sermon. Most of the persons present were in mourning. Dr. Stoughton selected for his text the Psalm xxxi. 6—"Into thy hands I commend my spirit, for thou has redeemed me. O Lord thou God of truth." Having referred to the melancholy occurrence which would be the subject of their thoughts, the preacher spoke of the character of David the Psalmist, and comparing him with Sir Donald M'Leod, said they were both rulers in the East. They were both men of great self-reliance, firm and erect as a rock in the midst of stormy waves. Rulers in the East, especially under the English dominion, had sometimes been tempted to forget their religious obligations, but Sir Donald M'Leod had been brought under that Christian culture which made him as simple as a little child. After tracing the career of Sir Donald the preacher continued—Although he became associated with one Christian community he was broad and generous in his sympathies towards all. In due course he went to Benares, where he met Mr. Leopold, a missionary of the Church Missionary Society, and they worked very heartily together. Sir Donald was conspicuously successful in establishing friendly relations with the natives, and of interpreting their feelings and engaging their attention. He consequently acquired a wonderful influence over them, and all who knew him soon came to love him as a father and a friend. Indeed, it had been said by one who knew the people well that if the natives had been called upon to elect a prince it would have been Donald M'Leod. Mr. Leopold had said that if all rulers had been like him there would be neither Hindoo nor Mahomedan in India, a remark that had been fully endorsed by one of our leading newspapers. He was not sent out as a missionary to teach Christianity, but the embodiment of Christianity in his life was a Gospel in itself. He had pronounced opinions on theological and ecclesiastical subjects, but he sank them all when any practical work was to be done, and this eminent Oriental scholar and statesman might often be seen addressing meetings of young women and like assemblies in the darkest parts of the East of London. He never strove to accumulate wealth, and died, as the world would say, poor. His zeal for religion was great, and there was one of royal and princely rank whom he converted who is now working with success in the mission-field of India.

THE IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF INDIA.—An interesting summary of Indian trade during the past ten years has just been published, which may profitably engage attention for a few minutes. In the period 1861-2 to 1870-1 Indian imports and exports have greatly increased. Trade with some leading countries has diminished, and with others increased. Some of the main articles of import and export have undergone similar fluctuations, and the shipping which moves this ever-increasing and changing produce has no less undergone many alterations. The exports reached their highest amount in 1864-5, when they were sixty-nine and a-half millions, of which nearly two-thirds came to the United Kingdom. Chiefly owing to the opium trade, China is the next best customer of India. The exports increased from ten and a-half millions in 1861-2 to thirteen millions in 1870-1. America comes third, whither two and a-half millions of export were sent in 1870-1, as compared with £800,000 in 1861-2. France, which used to rank third, taking in the highest year four and a-quarter millions of Indian produce, has been made fourth by the Franco-German war, having taken in 1870-1 but two millions. As to the tonnage by which this great trade is carried, it is chiefly and increasingly British. In 1861-2 the tonnage was 5,887,351, and in 1870-1 6,429,339, but in the great cotton year 1864-5 it reached nearly eight millions. The number of vessels have, at the same time, decreased, so that a much larger class of ships must now be employed. The proportion of British tonnage is very great, being about two-thirds of the whole. The American, German, and French tonnage has decreased. The distribution of the trade amongst the different provinces is gone into in these official returns, but this is a detail which chiefly concerns India. Commercial readers in this country will find more interest in looking over the progress, or otherwise, of the main articles of export. Cotton holds the first position, the value in 1870-1 being one-third the whole produce of India. In 1861-2 it was ten and a-quarter millions, in the great cotton famine of 1864-5 it was thirty-seven and a-half millions, in 1866-7 it was sixteen and a-half millions, and now it is about twenty millions. Opium comes next in importance, the exports in 1870-1 being ten and three-quarter millions. The much more innocent produce, tea, which in 1861-2 was £192,422, was £1,139,703 in 1870-71. Coffee was at one time as considerable an export as tea, but it is now only about two-thirds of its rival, though it has doubled in the ten years. The total in 1870-1 was £809,701. Sugar, saltpetre, and oils have declined, but wool has advanced to the extent that wool manufactures have fallen off. From this it may be inferred that the production of the raw material is the natural occupation in a country like India, just as manufactures are the special occupation of the inhabitants of less fertile countries. The imports of India in 1870-1 were nearly thirty-three and a-half millions, and the exports nearly fifty-eight millions.

A CURIOUS CASE OF MESMERISM.—A very strange yet authentic case is reported in the Indian Medical Gazette by the Civil Surgeon of Hoshungabad. A young woman, named Nunnee, aged twenty-four, was married some twelve years ago; she, however, did not go to her husband's house for two years afterwards. After staying with him for eight days, she suddenly became insensible, and remained so for two or three days. She was taken back to her mother, and soon got well. Then follows a very remarkable history. During the next four or five years she never entered her husband's house without falling insensible, and remaining so. He was very kind and attentive to her; she liked him, but whenever he came into her presence she at once sank into this state. This went on till she became emaciated and exhausted, and at last her parents applied to Court for a separate maintenance for her. While she was in court, the husband entered, and she instantly became insensible, and was carried to the hospital, where the case was carefully attended to by Dr. Cullen, in March this year. While in this state her pulse was even breathing soft, her body pliant and relaxed; she could eat nothing. Experiments were carefully made to see if there was no trick about it. While she was in bed, her husband was muffled up, and made to walk through the ward. She said she felt he was near her, and she was by no means well, but had not seen him anywhere about. Next day this experiment was repeated, and she actually became insensible as before. When the husband left the place she recovered. The experiment as to the influence of the husband's presence was tried in all sorts of ways. He was made to pass behind her, and to be near her in a separate ward, but this had no effect, but whenever he was brought to look on her face, though muffled up, or disguised as a policeman, as a sepoy, and so forth, she was at once influenced. The experiments continued for about a month, and the conclusion was that the husband unconsciously mesmerised her. The Court came to the conclusion that it was impossible she could live with him, and a separate allowance was ordered. The husband was asked to try if he could not remove the effect, seeing that he had the power to cause it, but he was quite frightened at the idea of having the power, and could not control it in any way.—Indian Public Opinion.

"This is one of an exceedingly useful class of books. When we remember the number of histories of India which have appeared within the last century, have had their little day, been thrown aside, then forgotten, we should acknowledge with becoming gratitude any writer who could combine something of the accurate research of Gibbon with a dash of the brilliancy of Macaulay, and thus make the public better acquainted with that portion of the British Empire than, judging from what goes on in Parliament during an Indian debate, they at present are."—School Board Chronicle.

PROFESSIONAL OPINIONS

SUPPORTING AND RECOMMENDING THIS SYSTEM.

March, 1871.

I have much pleasure in bearing my unqualified testimony to the admirable system of military exercises as given in Sergeant-major B. Browne's book. I can speak confidently of it, having had personal experience of its value. I am in the habit of recommending it to all those under my care, who require this additional mode of treatment for developing their frame.

C. M. MILLER, M.D.,

Assistant-surgeon, London Rifle Brigade.

Mr. Browne.—Nothing can be more true, in my opinion, than all you say in favour of training all our boys to military exercises. Its usefulness cannot be overrated, either to the boys themselves or to the nation, which would thus find, in a short time, and without any inconvenience or effort, the best part of its educated population prepared to take part in the defence of the country, almost without training, and should their services in this way happily never be required, the country would still have the satisfaction of seeing its young male population immensely benefited in health, strength, appearance, and general manliness. If carried out at all schools, it would become the favourite pastime of the boys.

H. FYRRE, Lieutenant-general.

Birkbeck Schools, Kingsland, N., March 7, 1871.

For some years past all the boys and girls of these schools have been put through a course of systematic drill, such as that laid down in Sergeant-major Browne's book. The results have been in the highest degree satisfactory. Not only is the physical condition of the children greatly improved, but the discipline of the drill-ground produces habits of obedience and attention, which, carried into the school-room, conduce greatly to the mental progress of the children, as well as materially aid in maintaining order. Until the time shall come when the Government shall wisely insist upon every child being efficiently drilled, schoolmasters who have not yet tried the experiment will do well to do so without delay.

Of course it is of the utmost importance that the drill-instructor should not be a mere martinet. He must be able to convey his instructions clearly and pleasantly; have an unlimited supply of patience, and show that he really takes an interest in his work.

It has been our good fortune for some years to have secured the services of Sergeant-major Browne, the author of this little book ("Setting-up Drill," &c.), who is not only assiduous in performing his duties, but who is fond of his work, and shows it, and, therefore, succeeds admirably.

JAMES RUMTZ, Head Master.

Kingsland Middle Class Schools, Sandringham-road, March 7, 1871.

Physical exercise is undoubtedly one of the requisites of youth, and if such exercise be conducted with a purpose, it is not only productive of health to the body, but also induces habits of order and energy. In our schools the system of drill instruction has been adopted with the best results, and I am quite convinced that any school would be the better for its introduction. Of course a great deal depends upon the drill-instructor; but if such an one as ours (Sergeant-major Browne, who is thoroughly fond of the work, and at the same time a strict disciplinarian and a perfect gentleman), be obtained, the result will be all that can be desired.

ROBERT LANE, Head Master.

Southgate-road Middle Class School, De Beauvoir-town, N., March 6, 1871.

It is fortunate in the present day there is but little need for insisting upon this physical training of youth, as its importance is so generally recognised. To insure success, however, it is indispensable that it should be conducted by well-qualified instructors, such as are apt to teach, of gentlemanly manners and good dis-ciplinarians. From my observations of Sergeant-major Browne, I am able to testify to his possession of those qualifications, and have very great pleasure in recommending his system of drill to those who may be desirous of introducing physical exercises into their schools.

THOMAS WILSON, F.R.G.S., Head Master.

Finishing Establishment for Young Ladies,
Benyon-house, 32, Culford-road, De Beauvoir-town, N.,
March 6, 1871.

Mrs. Aldam has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficiency of Sergeant-major Browne's method of drilling, and as possessing not only great patience, but also consideration for the strength of the pupils, that no undue fatigue is occasioned, no too sudden a strain upon the muscles of growing children, eager, perhaps, to outdo their schoolfellows, a point too frequently overlooked, when a large number are being drilled.

PEPSINE.—The popular and professional medicine for Indigestion is Morson's Pepsine, the active principle of the gastric juice. In Powder, Lozenges, Globules, and as Wine.

CHLORODYNE has now obtained such universal celebrity it can scarcely be considered a speciality, its composition being known to most European practitioners. The combination of Chloroform quickly relieves the pain and spasms of Cholera, Diarrhea, Dysentery, and in fact all acute and nervous pains, and chronic Coughs; frequently small doses will produce this beneficial result. Many of the Chlorodynes of commerce are not of uniform strength; this has induced Morson and Son to compound their preparation. Sold in $\frac{1}{2}$ -oz., 1, and 2-oz. bottles.

GELATINE.—The purest preparation of this nutritious agent extant is Morson's.

PEPTIC FOOD for Invalids and Infants, digestible, nutritious, and palatable. Sold in $\frac{1}{2}$ -lb. and 1-lb. tins.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

With the advent of the inclemencies of winter many afflictions will arise unless effective means for preventing or checking their courses be adopted. No lingering cough, hoarseness, or shortness of breath on slight exertion should be permitted to continue a single day without measures being taken for their removal, more especially when remedial means are safe, rapid, and effective. These qualities are displayed in a high degree by Holloway's preparations. The Ointment rubbed upon the skin draws surplus blood from congested structures, and gives immense relief to every oppressed organ concerned in the respiration and the circulation. This wholesome effect externally, aided by the alterative action of the Pills internally, dispels all danger from latent mischief.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, December 2; Agra and Madras, November 30; Calcutta, November 29.

LAST week we left Lord Northbrook at Puna, the guest of Sir P. Wodehouse. On Monday, the 25th November, a grand parade of the troops in the great military capital of Western India was held for the Viceroy's edification. After the review, which went off as brilliantly as could be wished, his Lordship paid a visit to Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy. The same evening there was a State Dinner at Ganesh Kind, and next morning the Viceroy started by rail for Nandgaum, going down the famous Bhor-Ghat incline on a trolley, in order to take in all the wonders of that engineering masterpiece, and perhaps to enjoy at his leisure the magnificent scenery around the line. From Nandgaum his Lordship set off for the famous caves of Ellora, where he spent all the next day, exploring the rock-temples under the guidance of Dr. Bhau Daji, the well-known savant of Bombay. The day closed with a grand camp-dinner and fireworks, or as a Bombay paper terms it "a pyrotechnic display." On Thursday, the 28th, the Viceroy rode over to the grand old Pathán fortress of Daulatabad, rebuilt on the site of the ancient Hindu city of Deogarh by the eccentric Mohammad Toghlaq who tried with small success to remove thither the whole population of Delhi. On the 29th Lord Northbrook went on by rail from Nandgaum to Nágpur, the sometime capital of the Bhosla Rajahs of Berár, where he held a levée the same afternoon. On Saturday he was discharging the same duty at Kámpiti. Great preparations were making for his reception at Barwai by Maharajah Holkar and a number of native Chiefs, including the Rewah Rajah and the Begam of Bhopál.

DURING his visit to Ferozpúr, Lord Northbrook expressed himself greatly pleased with the state of the arsenal at that place. Its defences however are pronounced to be defective, and the work of strengthening them will soon begin. At Multan the Viceroy, after consultation with Lord Napier, ordered the taking up of land for a new fort, destined to protect the ordnance and commissariat stores.

The burst of cholera in the Punjab has been followed by the prevalence of fever in many of the chief stations, especially Pesháwar and Mianmír. Among its victims was Mr. Butler, an Assistant Commissioner for Pesháwar, who died at Attok on his way down the country. An epidemic fever of the Bardwan type is also raging about Dacca. Dengue is still reported from various places, and Mr. Hobhouse, the Law Member of Council, has been laid up with it at Allahabad.

MR. LE POER WYNNE, Under-Secretary to the Indian Government, has gone to Murshidabad, to act as Resident in the room of Colonel Thornhill. His own place is meanwhile to be filled by Captain Henderson. Colonel Pelly, Political Agent in the Persian Gulf, left Bombay to join Sir Bartle Frere at Aden. The Zanzibar Mission is also to be joined by Mr. Mathuradass Khetsi, a subject of the Rao of Kutch and a large trader with the Eastern Coast of Africa.

THE little force to be employed in the Gáro Hills will consist of three detachments of Police and three companies of the 43rd Assam Light Infantry; the whole working in four bodies. One party of police under Captain Williamson, Deputy Commissioner in those parts, will march from Tura into the Hills, so as to meet another party under Captain Davis coming from the side of Goalpara. Mr. Daly of the Cachar Police with a third party will escort supplies from the Southern frontier. The whole of the Sepoys under Major Blunt were to march from Gowhaty into the Kásia Hills, in readiness to act against the Garos from that side. It is likely however that they will move on to some other place, as the Garo villages on the Khásia side have already made their submission.

THE yearly opium sales in Calcutta for the present season have already realised £762,000 more, it seems, than the total estimated for the same period by Sir Richard Temple. At the same rate Lord Northbrook's Finance Minister will probably exceed his estimates for the whole year on opium alone by something like a million and a-quarter. In that case, should nothing occur to falsify the rest of his estimates, the Viceroy will have no excuse left him, if even he were in want of any, for continuing the income-tax in the coming year.

IN its controversy with the Madras Times on the proposed transfer of the Madras Gun-Carriage Factory to Allahabad, the Pioneer argues that "no one contemplates abandoning Allahabad with its fort and arsenal to a rebel force under any circumstances whatever." Perhaps not; but what has that to do with the question of retaining the old factory at Madras? Is it impossible to conceive a course of events through which Southern India might for a time be cut off from Allahabad? To our thinking one central arsenal for all India would be the very reductio ad absurdum of the centralising principle.

FROM a paper in the official Gazette of India it appears that the total value of India's foreign trade in 1871-72 amounted to £107,319,500, or nearly 1½ million more than that of 1868-69, the best year since the close of the American War. Of that sum £42,657,560 represent the imports, to which Great Britain and Suez contributed about 32½ millions, France more than half a million, Australia rather more than France, and the Mediterranean Ports £285,378. From China there came in about four millions, more than a million from Ceylon, £884,111 from the Straits Settlements, a few thousands less from the Persian Gulf, £562,601 from the Mauritius, and nearly £400,000 from the Red Sea. America on the other hand sent no more than the worth of £73,177; Germany £33,501, or a few thousand less than Bourbon, and about half as much as the Laccadives and Maldives. While Africa outside the Red Sea furnished £208,024 and Aden £161,429, the West Indies sent only £407. The total imports exceeded those of the year before by about 3½ millions. Of the £64,661,940 that make up an export trade larger by seven millions than that of 1870-71, England and Suez received a little more than 33 millions, France £4,175,233, the Mediterranean Ports nearly 2½ millions, America 2½ millions, Germany £355,588, and other countries in Europe not quite a million. China took nearly four million, Ceylon more than two, and the Straits £2,154,630. To the Persian Gulf were exported £1,386,326, to the Mauritius and Bourbon about £740,000, to Aden and the Red Sea about £650,000, and over a quarter of a million to the African Coast. The West Indies imported nearly £130,000, and the Maldives and Laccadives only about £39,000. The exports to France seem already to have touched a higher figure than they did the year before the German invasion. The export trade with the Mediterranean has risen in five years from £177,000 to 2½ million; a result due to the opening of the Suez Canal, which has also brought India into direct intercourse with Russia, Holland, and Belgium. In five years the exports to these three countries, mostly of raw cotton, have risen from £57,400 to £987,800.

In the metal imports to India there has been a gradual decline from nearly four million pounds' worth in 1867-68 to only £2,360,963 in the past year. The cotton imports for last year fell in value by about 1½ million. The export trade in rice was exceeded in value only by the returns for 1864 and 1865. The whole import duty for last year amounted to £4,129,155, and the export duty to £687,768; altogether a considerable increase on the returns for former years. In spite of gloomy forebodings caused by the commercial dullness of the two or three years before, the foreign trade of India in 1871-72 reached a higher total value than it had ever done, except during the three unexampled years that followed the outbreak of the American War.

A TELEGRAM from St. Petersburg declares that the Russian Government has at last resolved to undertake a regular campaign against Khiva. We hear nothing more about the reconnoitring party; but the Indian papers are already giving a new version of the story which reached us some time ago as to the occupation of Khiva by a Russian force. We are now informed that the Russian column, reconnoitring party, or whatever it was, instead of occupying Khiva, was actually beaten back by the Khan's troops. If so, it may after all have been merely reconnoitring, and the coming expedition may indicate the result of its inquiries.

To judge from several of the Indian papers, the Anglo-Indian public, arguing from sad experience in the past, have made up their minds that India is to be saddled after all with the costs of the Zanzibar Expedition. Nothing, of course, as the Friend of India puts it, "could be more unjust," and yet nothing would be more in keeping with the regular course of England's dealings with India. Still, we not only hope, but feel pretty certain that the statements of the Englishman and the Bombay Gazette are incorrect. Two years ago, at any rate, an attempt of the English Government to get up a similar undertaking fell through, because the India Office steadily refused to charge the Indian revenues with the costs of an enterprise from which England would have reaped the chief benefit. It is hardly to be supposed that the Duke of Argyll, who has always shown himself a jealous stickler for the interests of the Indian taxpayer as against the Imperial Treasury, has since yielded to the pressure of his ministerial colleagues in a matter with which India is far less directly concerned than England herself. The suppression of slavery is a question of Imperial policy, towards the settlement of which India should not be called upon to pay more than her due share merely because the slave trade with Zanzibar is in part fostered by Indian Baiaans. Nor is it likely that so zealous a friend of India as Sir Bartle Frere should have agreed to conduct a mission designed to afford his countrymen the cheap gratification of being generous at other people's expense. We cannot believe that a prominent member of the Indian Council has gone out of his way to become the instrument of a grossly unjust attack upon the revenues of the country he once helped to govern.

ACCORDING to a recent telegram from Calcutta, the Viceroy, who arrived there in the second week of this month, has since been engaged in his long proposed inquiry into the working of the local and imperial taxes in India. If the Englishman may be trusted on a question about which rumour has so long been busy prophesying things pleasant to the popular mind, his Lordship has definitely made up his mind to abolish the income-tax in the forthcoming Budget. On this occasion at any rate rumour may claim support from his Lordship's speeches in Bombay.

SIR BARTLE FRERE, it seems, was still at Cairo, when the latest telegram concerning him was despatched from Egypt.

THE Government enquiry into the circumstances which caused the death of Sir D. McLeod has brought out one or two admissions fatal to the present mode of railway management. At least two witnesses, Mr. Spack, Engineer to the Metropolitan District Railway, and Mr. Fenton, an officer of the Metropolitan Line, agreed in thinking that if all railway carriages had continuous footboards, the sad accident to Sir Donald might not have occurred. Seeing that eighty-seven of the 105 carriages now running on the Metropolitan line already have continuous footboards, the extension of the system to every carriage on the two lines need not involve any tremendous difficulty. The objection started by Mr. Bore of the North-Western Railway, that continuous footboards would encourage passengers to get into moving trains, may be dismissed at once as an official impertinence, or a wild grasping at any excuse for letting ill alone. Mr. Spack, as a practical man, could see "no reason why all the carriages running over his line should not be fitted with continuous footboards." With regard to the sister question of uniform platforms, there may be greater difficulties to overcome; but railway companies are used by this time to facing difficulties, and Captain Tyler was not unreasonable in claiming for the public a right to "know why carriages could not be made to fit platforms, and platforms carriages." The shutting of gates again may involve more porters; but if such a practice prevents accidents anywhere, it would surely prevent a yet greater number on the underground lines. If it answers at the Charing Cross terminus, it ought to answer yet more effectually at the Gloucester-road station.

We are glad to see that Colonel Hamley's great work on the Operations of War has already reached its third edition. In its present shape it may almost be called a new book, so much having been added to the original work in consequence of the great campaigns of 1866 and 1870-71. In the present edition, which brings us down to the latest results of civilised warfare and modern improvements in warlike appliances, not only have new chapters been introduced on "The Campaign of Metz and Sedan" and on "Changes in Contemporary Tactics;" but many other parts of the work have been recast and rewritten, and several pages have been devoted to a careful description of the battle of Woerth. Almost every chapter indeed contains something new, whether in modification of what had been said before, or in enforcement of lessons taught by late events. New maps and plans bearing on those events give completeness to a work of which Englishmen in every class may well be proud. In criticising the movements of the French and German armies about Metz and Sedan, Colonel Hamley writes with a soldierly appreciation of the merits and shortcomings on either side. He makes full allowance for example for the difficulties which beset Bazaine after his check at Rezonville, and for the political causes which drove McMahon on to destruction at Sedan. The very openings which the Germans sometimes offered to an attack by superior numbers are ascribed to "the excess of an invaluable quality—namely promptitude to seek and resolution to engage the enemy." If he lays stress on the German superiority in numbers, he readily admits that the confidence shown by the Germans in themselves throughout the campaign sprang not from their superior numbers, but "from the excellence of discipline, training, and command which is the proper fruit of the Prussian military system." The world, says Colonel Hamley, has never before seen "a people and an army who have sought the secrets of success with study so thorough, zeal so untiring, and self-denial so stern, as those which obey the German Emperor." The lesson to other nations seems clear enough. If we may regret that "the best intellect of a nation should be absorbed by the profession of arms," it none the less behoves us to act on the principle of Elspeth Cheyne's remark concerning Lady Glenallan—"We maun a' ride when she's in the saddle."

THERE is, at any rate, one English actuary in this country who has learned to recognise the plain truth that Englishmen in India after a certain age have as good a chance of living as their countrymen at home. The manager of a large insurance office in Edinburgh has furnished the Times of India with a statement of the capitalised value of a deferred annuity of £668. 12s. 5d., or colonel's allowance, between the ages of 44 and 56. It is now agreed, he says, that "none but good lives survive 44 in India, and that the rates charged after that age on an Anglo-Indian life should not be more than that charged on an European life." According to his scale, the prospect of colonel's allowance would be worth £1,535 to an officer 44 years old, and from that age up to 56 the yearly gain in value would average about £300. From these calculations, which bear out the teachings of all practical experience, it is evident that no more time should be lost in dealing boldly with the question, how to get rid of the surplus field officers in the Indian Army, who, as things stand, prefer holding on for colonel's allowances to starving at home on the old rates of pension or the English pay of their rank. Every year lost in settling the matter will involve the Government in ever-increasing perplexities and expense, besides aggravating the moral and political dangers of discontent in the higher ranks of the army. The timely offer of a fair equivalent for the present pay and prospects of field officers would relieve the Indian Treasury of a tremendous burden in the future, and give free play at once to the clogged circulation of the Indian Staff Corps. The officers in question, as the Times of India truly remarks, are willing to take "much less as bonus than would purchase the deferred annuity of £668. 12s. 5d.," which the Government is bound to pay them in due time, besides the regular pay of a colonel at home. We may add that many of them are just as ready to commute the moderate bonus for a fair increase of their retiring pensions. Whichever way the matter might be adjusted however, whether by an increased pension or an ordinary pension and a bonus, it is certain that the time for adjusting it has already come, and that every year's delay in cutting the knot caused by past mismanagement must bring about worse and worse entanglements in the future.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, December 23, 1872.

THE LOSHAIS AND THEIR COUNTRY.

The official Reports from the Survey Department on the Loshai Expedition attest the amount of useful work done by the surveying parties which accompanied the two columns under Generals Bouchier and Brownlow. The Northern party, under Captain Badgeley, started from Cachar, and accomplished about 600 square miles of triangulation in connection with the Great Trigonometrical Survey, besides nearly 200 miles of linear route survey and 4,800 square miles of topography, extending to 93 deg. 30 min. east longitude, and nearly to the 23rd degree of north latitude. The country surveyed includes the whole course of the Tui-vi and its tributaries, whose waters flow into the Barak River at Tipai Mukh. A part of the watershed between the affluents of the Barak and those of the Koladan has also been carefully mapped out.

The Southern party, starting under Major Macdonald from Chittagong, completed a triangulation of 2,300 square miles and a topographical survey of 1,700, in connection with the east frontier series of the Trigonometrical Survey, over a tract of country lying between 23 deg. 30 min. and 23 deg. 45 min. north latitude, and 92 deg. 30 min. and 93 deg. east longitude. Its labours have determined a large portion of the water-parting between the Cachar and Chittagong and Akyab water system. Out of forty well defined geographical points, the heights of thirty-seven have been accurately measured. Military considerations having prevented a junction of the two parties, there remains a blank of about forty miles, which geographers would have liked to see filled up. The failure of Major Macdonald's party to obtain observations at Benkoya's village was not due, in the Viceroy's opinion, to Captain Lewin's alleged mismanagement; Benkoya's refusal having arisen from "a misunderstanding for which the civil officer with the column was in no degree responsible." It must have been very disappointing to Major Macdonald to find himself debarred, without apparent cause, from obtaining "one common side for the triangulation of the Left Column union to connect upon;" but it was held unwise to use force for that purpose, and there appears have been no reason for throwing the blame of the failure on a able and experienced an officer as Captain Lewin.

Major Macdonald pays a warm tribute to the 2nd Ghoorkas whose prompt and bold support of his surveying parties w equalled by their readiness to make him and his followers comfortable. Their surgeon also, Dr. F. Allen, "looked after our sick as if they were men of his own regiment." The Major's account of the Kookies or Loshais confirms the pleasing picture already drawn of these tribes by Captain Lewin in his work on Hill Tipperah. They raise abundant crops of rice, cotton, melons, gourds, maize, and so forth with the least possible amount of labour by a process which involves frequent change of place, and is only feasible in countries where vegetation quickly renews itself. So fruitful is the soil, that Major Macdonald counted 363 and 387 grains in a single head of rice, and "the same soil produced gourds, vetches, and chillies in the same crop." The cotton bolls, which are of vast size, bear very fine thread with short staple. The made-up cotton is unrivalled for strength and durability, and the Kookie basket-work is "as beautiful as it is strong." The Kookies are "well sheltered, well clothed, sleeping softly on thick cotton counterpanes, and well fed." Like the Chinese, to which race they belong, they eat dog's flesh, and everything in short that flies, runs, crawls, or creeps, "as well as the grub in its antenatal tomb." Their houses are built on raised piles, the family living above and the pigs which do their scavenging below. Their rivers teem with fish, and the forests furnish them with ample sport. They are "far more civilised than any of the aboriginal races of India, such as the Bhils, Gonds, Kols, and Sonthalies," and in Major Macdonald's opinion no happier people are to be found in the whole world. There was not a man in General Brownlow's force who did not think better of these Kookies than of "our hill tribes."

Their social polity is described as a kind of communism under the despotic rule of a hereditary chief. In such matters as the holding of land in common and the equal division of the fruits of their common labour, they seem to approach the communistic ideals of modern Europe. They are said to be an eminently pious race. Before eating his fowl or pig, the Kookie invariably kills it in front of his god, a kind of "stool four inches square, surrounded by a small fence hung with cotton wool dyed in bright colours!" According to Captain Badgeley they are mighty hunters, flying at all kinds of game, from an elephant to a field-rat, from a hornbill to a wagtail, and very clever in snaring, shooting, or otherwise catching their prey. The same writer was amused with their ideas of courage; war with them consists of surprises and bush-fighting, and in their first brush with our sepoy the latter were told not to stick like cowards in the open, but to come into the jungle like men. Their fire-arms are flint locks of very ancient date. Before setting out on the war-path they dress themselves in their best and neatest, which means, we suppose, "a large square cloth or two put on together, according to the temperature," and passed under the right arm, "with two corners thrown in opposite directions over the left shoulder."

According to Captain Badgeley the Loshais are fairer than the Bengalis, and average five foot six in height, with full muscular figures, "especially about the shoulders and calves." They appear to be active, intelligent, and energetic, have well-shaped heads and good foreheads, with straight black or brown hair and features unmistakably of the Chinese type, and an open, bold, and generally pleasing expression. They are great smokers, and drink, according to Captain Tanner, a peculiar fermented liquor called Seepa, out of cow's horns, or sucked through bamboo tubes. The excitement caused by Captain Tanner's appearance on horseback among a party of Howlongs is explained by the fact that they "eat horses and have never dreamt of riding them."

The hills measured by Captain Badgeley's or the Northern party increase gradually from 3,650 to 7,000 feet. From the highest point reached the highest ranges lie north-east and south-south-east, and between these and Burmah, which is shut out by another lofty ridge, the country is crossed by lower lines of hills stretching from north to south, and rising in height as they approach the watershed line of the Barak and the Koldan. The hill ranges traversed by the southern party varied in height from 2,700 feet in the Sailoo country to 6,000 in that of the Shindoos; while one distant peak measured 8,000 feet. "Looking down," writes Major Macdonald, "from any commanding point, the whole looks like a series of great mountain waves in a sea of forest, dotted here and there with broad patches of yellow light which mark the cultivation." These hill-ranges are all sandstone, apparently of recent formation, to judge from the absence of any fossil remains in them. They are also in Major Macdonald's belief totally devoid of mineral wealth. "Splendid lemons" however grow there, and the tea-plant has been found on the Towrong Hill. The general aspect of the country traversed by the Northern party may be gathered from the following passage in Captain Tanner's report:—

I have described the panorama from this point as embracing an extensive view of mountain and of valley, of serrated ridge-like mountain chains piled one behind the other, and rising higher and higher towards the east until the view in the far-off distance is backed up by a faint blue mountain range of great altitude, of mountains separated from each other by deep land-locked valleys and by streams walled in between high abrupt ridges, and over mountain and valley from the highest peaks down to the very bottom of the dark ravines a clothing of the most profuse vegetation of every hue and colour. The shades which towards evening overspread the valleys, and which gradually creep up the sides of those hills which are not far distant, and the shadows which fall across the ranges beyond, are of the deepest purple blue; the evening sun at the same time lighting up the more prominent peaks and spurs with a most exquisite, rich golden rose. The lovely tints which pervade the landscape on a bracing December evening, when the air is pure and clear, far surpass in vividness anything I have before seen in any part of the world; in no other country has it been my fortune to see such wonderful effects of aerial perspective. Then, too, the foreground is as striking as the rest of the picture; there are long cultivated, half-cleared slopes dotted here and there with gigantic forest trees, which from their size have resisted the axe and the fire of the cultivator when preparing his lauds for crops. Artistic groups of graceful trees intermixed with bamboo adorn these slopes, and at your feet lie deep gorges, whose sides are clothed with tropical vegetation of the most luxuriant description. Pleasantly situated in the open cultivated spots may be seen the cheerful, neatly built bamboo houses of the cultivators, thus giving a finish, as it were, to one of the most striking pictures that can be imagined.

THE HINDUSTANI ABROAD.—VI. TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Since last I write, I have received letter from native epistolary correspondent in Calcutta, saying that English community in newspaper press of Presidency are asking what reason that "you are writing these literary effusions in Allen's Indian Mail?" They are saying "who is Faiz Ali Khan" that English magnate gentleman make fuss upon, and ask to go to aristocratic "At home?" He is only common class native of Hindustan like little merchant. Such humble parvenus the high-born gentlemen in India are not asking to hospitable roof, why in England, they are asking? I think there is little green-eyed monster got here underneath. Always in India from immemorial epoch of time they are treating all natives with scorn like mangey jungly dogs even if respectable talookdars and zemindars; only princes and Nawabs they are condescending asking to hospitable seat under mahogany. Therefore in India natives are too much afraid. Besides in India one million of crore of natives are swarming everywhere like ants on an ant-hill. Why should European ask, can see every day? Only too common. But in London natives only come now and then. What time come then rare curiosities they are seeming. But best in Oriental costume. Then "like a grain of dark Peshawur rice in middle of tray of Dacca white rice, every one perceives them at a glance!" Also, in England all Englishmen are without pride, even royal noblemen, and treat natives same sort as equal. One day I am seeing His Grace the most noble the Duke of Argyll, Macallum More, &c., &c., related consanguinously to most gracious Majesty, &c., the great nuzer of India, to whom the Lord Sahib, the Governor-General, is but dirt. His Excellency is not proud, he condescended to notice by bow, and is affable without circumlocution of red-tape. Also, perhaps, these lofty ones like to hear what insignificant dusky fellow-subjects are thinking, so I am now going to tell under rose one or two things. First, what is this I am reading about Russian invasion of Khiva?

I am perusing leading editorials on subject without number! The widely-circulated Thunderer of Printing-house-square the other day is saying:—"Well this good news, capital news, soon be nearest neighbour with civilised State, then be exchanging calico commodities, this very profitable, very pleasant indeed," and pretend to chuckle in stomach! Other journals all say, "never mind if Russians come. We do not envy. We have got Gem of East other countries do not want." Also, "we will meet fresh at passes soon demolish in jiffy." All very pleased very happy! But do not ask what natives of India are saying by themselves in Bazaar! Many months ago gossiping rumour with one hundred tongues was whispering in Delhi—I was hearing before I left. They were saying that all same time English people pretend not afraid, the great Wuzer is writing in hurry very private to the Governor-General of India, and sealing very strong with own confidential seal. "Be sure you very kind to all the nobles and princes of Hindostan—give if can—if are loyal, then masses always safe—promises plenty you may make, if will invest in Government paper." Perhaps this not true—Wuzer not send; but if send, do not think if speak candid quite proper, because masses not always safe. If Russian disguised emissaries with plenty gold will send—then too much mischief is stirring up. Princes cannot hold. Plenty masses hate English very bad. Why cannot tell. Perhaps because different religion, different customs got. If think can turn out of India, would help other nation. You English not believe this, but natives very clever actors, always deceiving English.

Besides, not wrong. Natives 200 millions, English only 30 millions! Why 30 millions govern 200 millions? This tyrannical and oppression if 200 millions not agree. Then 200 millions can rebel without sin. Only watching opportunity. But if obstinate English always are saying, "Natives of India very kindly treated, plenty education getting, no oppression they are suffering, never rebel against good masters;" then English little like Bengalee woman, if wrap up face with Doputta or sheet, then quite contented walk about in garb of Mother Eve!—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
Conway's Boarding-house,

SAVINGS BANKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—It has been well said that India is the sink of the precious metals. However large may be the quantity of silver and gold poured into it, very little appears to come out.

In page 1181 of your Paper of the 9th inst., you have republished the substance of an article in the Calcutta Englishman stating that "within eight years enough bullion has been accumulated in India to discharge the whole revenue of the Empire for two and a-half years to come."

If this be the fact during eight years only, what amount has been sunk in the ground, or concealed in walls, or placed in the shape of ornaments on young children during the past hundred years?

Sixteen years have elapsed since a servant of Government, anxious to prevent murders for the sake of ornaments worn by children, and dacoities for the sake of hidden treasure; anxious to improve trade by putting into circulation fifty or sixty crores of buried rupees; and anxious to check the useless drain of treasure from Europe into the sink of the precious metals, urged the establishment of Savings Banks in the Mofussil of India.

The chief difficulty was to find efficient unpaid superintendence as in England and Scotland, and to obtain efficient and trustworthy establishments as in France.

Government remained deaf to all official entreaties, until Mr. George Dickson, the secretary to the Bank of Bengal, took up the subject, and after two or three years' delay, obtained the sanction of Government to the establishment of a Savings Bank, I believe, in each district of India.

I have searched your paper in vain for any notice of the working of the new system. Its success is a matter of interest for the whole world; for Australia as well as for England; for California and Mexico as well as for France.

Has Government succeeded in inducing the natives of India to disinter their hoards?

I fear not; I can but suggest the cause, and I trust that you will publish a precis of the last annual report, from perusing which the English public may learn whether my conjecture be correct.

I believe that the native treasurers and other servants in Indian Savings Banks are apt to charge discount on deposits on the plea that the rupees paid in are of short weight, and are apt to reissue those same short weight rupees at par.

Government does not sanction this; its orders are unmistakable, that all short weight rupees are to be cut in two, and sent as bullion to the Mint for re-coinage.

It will be very difficult to check this objectionable practice unless stringent orders be issued to weigh publicly all sums disbursed from Savings Banks. A depositor who withdraws money from such banks has a quantity of rupees thrown before him. How is he to detect how many of them are of short weight? Few depositors carry scales with them; they are seldom allowed time or place for weighing; and they would be considered a nuisance if they were to complain of the rupees being light.

Depositors who have been required to pay discount on rupees paid by them, and who are repaid in short weight rupees at par, are not likely to repeat the experiment of trusting their money to the Government Savings Banks, neither are they likely "to recommend their neighbours to patronise such institutions."

The income-tax may also have something to do with native distrust.

Whatever may be the causes of the non-success of Savings Banks the sooner they are removed the better. The Home Council is better qualified to discuss this subject than the Councils in India, for the former have opportunities of consulting the managers of English, Scotch, and French Savings Banks.

—Your obedient servant,
Dec. 11.

INDIAN ADMINISTRATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—The Empire established by Napoleon III. was generally considered to be the Government best suited for the people of France; the one best calculated to secure strength, safety and glory for the nation which it ruled. Yet, a struggle of only two months' duration brought the whole edifice to the ground. In July, 1870, the Empire was prosperous and flourishing in apparent security; before the end of that summer it had fallen to the lowest depths of misfortune and degradation. Never before had France suffered such disasters; never before had she been subjected to so much humiliation. The Emperor, who had assumed the entire power and responsibility of the Government, could, in his justification, say only "I have been deceived." He had waged war without having an efficient army or an organised staff; he had relied on foreign alliances, without reasonable grounds for such reliance; in short, he had wantonly sacrificed the honour, the wealth, and the happiness of a great nation, and his only plea of justification was, "I have been deceived." Deceived on the condition of the army; deceived on the sentiments of foreign Governments towards that of France!

These reflections suggest a comparison between the condition of the French Empire under Louis Napoleon and that of our Indian Empire under its present Government, as, between the two, there seem to exist some essential points of similarity, an examination of which might enable us to see where the course pursued with regard to the latter is likely to lead us.

In India, as in France, the Government, while possessing many admirable administrative qualities, is not based on popular sympathy, which is the only safe foundation for a government to rest upon, and to the absence of which may truly be ascribed the sudden downfall of the French Empire.

In India, under the rule of the East India Company, the people were comparatively happy and were wont to look upon the British Government as the best they had known. But the incessant and often conflicting changes which have since been introduced in its administration, the rapidity and hurry with which new laws have been enacted, and afterwards revised or repealed; the enormous increase in taxation, which raised the revenue from thirty-three millions to fifty-four millions in fourteen years; the additional taxes which are about to be imposed and the rumours as to numerous others being under consideration; all has tended to bewilder and unsettle the mind of the people, who, of late, have often been heard to exclaim, "Is this the same British rule under which we lived so happily? We used to contrive not only to live, but to save; now, alas! if we procure a sufficiency of food, we have no means left to clothe ourselves, and what will it be when the new taxes spoken of are demanded of us!" The actual state of the popular feeling has been most correctly depicted in that Minute of Lord Mayo which was recently quoted in Parliament, and in which his lordship said that the increased taxation of late years had produced a feeling of discontent among all classes, amounting to a political danger the magnitude of which could scarcely be over-estimated.

Let us now proceed to another point of similarity. In India, as in France, the power and responsibility of governing rest with one single individual. But in this respect our condition is much worse than was that of France, for our Emperor (the Secretary of State for India) resides at eight thousand miles away from his Empire; he has never seen the country and understands none of the languages of its inhabitants. Moreover, his mind is occupied with great interests at home, in which his position and prosperity are more immediately concerned than in the good government of India or the welfare of its inhabitants. His opportunities, therefore, of becoming acquainted with the state of the Empire confided to him, with the condition of its army and the wants and feelings of its people, are indeed scanty as compared with those which were enjoyed by the French Emperor; and yet the latter was so egregiously deceived!

Under these circumstances, is it reasonable that the people of England should rest satisfied with the unsupported statement of an Under Secretary, that things are all right in India?

The populations have of late given unmistakable signs of discontent; petitions from various sections have been received, praying for a local investigation. The highest officers in India, charged with the safety of the Empire, have proclaimed the existence of danger, and yet nothing has been done beyond the appointment of an Indian Finance Committee, whose sittings are held at eight thousand miles away from the scene of action, and whose members are almost all more or less interested in concealing the defects in the recent administration of India. Is it matter for wonder, then, that the only result obtained after two entire sessions is a report stating that further investigation is required before any opinion can be expressed on the subject of the inquiry? Had a Royal Commission been appointed, when prayed for last year, it is probable that Parliament would ere now have been in possession of sufficient information to guide it in the course it should follow in the discharge of its duty towards India.

CIVIS.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

GRIEVANCES OF INDIAN PRINCES.

The Bombay Gazette hears it stated that the Chiefs of Central India consider themselves aggrieved at the way in which they have been treated by the British representatives at their Courts. There are rumours of the same feeling being abroad in some of the States supervised by the Government of Bombay. The native press has lately taken up the cry and urged in arguments of considerable weight that the Chiefs should have a fair opportunity of answering the charges made against them by the agents. If Government intend to take action upon such reports, it would be inconsistent with the spirit of our rule not to have a fair and complete inquiry either at Bombay or in the agency, where the Chiefs should have full liberty to speak in their own justification. This is the only means of preventing what may sooner or later become a great cankering sore. It should always be remembered that these Chiefs are the moral and political leaders of many thousands of natives, and that their loyalty is of vast importance to our rule. Yet in too many cases the only channel through which the feelings of these populations and their leaders is reported to Government is that of the Political Agent. We are the last to undervalue the excellent service performed by some able and experienced officers in the department, such as Mr. Havelock, and Colonel Sligo Anderson at Kolapore, or Colonel Law in Kattywar and Cutch. We admit that there are many who to great acquirements add that deep sympathy with others and that moderate conciliatory spirit which make them beloved as well as respected. On the other hand, if the popular report may be trusted, there are some so incapable of command that they cannot even control their own subordinates. We can imagine no position more painful for a warlike aristocracy than when their honour, interests, and princely prerogatives are believed to be at the mercy of a set of unscrupulous natives: when an impression gets abroad that the opinions of the European Civil and Military Officers living among the people and in daily intercourse with their Chiefs are over-ruled in such a way as to leave reason to suppose that the real agents of the land are the irresponsible amla of the head office. When such rumours are afloat there could be no harm in judicious enquiry at the seat of Government. In this way the feelings of the Chiefs could be truly ascertained: and the trust in the equity of the British power preserved undecayed. The presence of the Viceroy, the local Government, the Political Agents, and the Chiefs, in Bombay at the same time, affords a seldom recurring opportunity of gauging the temper of the people and of testing these rumours which should not be lost sight of.

THE VICEROY'S VISIT TO BOMBAY.

The Bombay Gazette observes that henceforward the fact will be realised that the Supreme Council can meet in a minor Presidency, that the Viceroy can make a personal inspection of the provinces under his rule, and can come face to face with the chief of those who exercise rule in the far-off and hitherto neglected presidencies. Visits like the one we are now considering are calculated to draw us all out of our provincialism and make us feel ourselves to be the subjects of the Queen in a higher sense than could be the case while we lived only under a local Governor, ourselves and our provinces unknown and uncared for by the direct representative of her Majesty. It may be true that Lord Northbrook's journey through the Bombay Presidency is only what might be expected from the times in which we live and the travelling facilities which the country affords. But we owe it to his Lordship that of his own choice he established a precedent in the government of this country which was urgently required. Five years spent in personal observation all over this large Peninsula will make Lord Northbrook, after his retirement from office, better acquainted with the country which he was sent to govern than any previous Governor-General of India, not excluding Lord Lawrence and Viscount Hardinge. We will not say a word about the private welcomes which Lord Northbrook has received in this city, but the expression of general satisfaction and genuine loyalty which has been manifested everywhere and amongst all classes is plain to every observer. Will not these feelings be a satisfaction to his Lordship, and will they not awaken a new and growing sympathy for the people of the distant presidencies? We feel assured that they will. Bombay has received Lord Northbrook with pride and pleasure, and parts from him with a lingering reluctance to bid him farewell.

THE BENGAL PILOT SERVICE.

The Indian Daily News remarks that under the present constitution of the service, a pilot receives no salary, but is only allowed a percentage on the pilotage charge levied on ships; and this arrangement would not of necessity involve any more hardship than is inseparable from the crowded state of the service, if the theoretical rule of employing officers in proper rotation were practically enforced. But in practice, three gentlemen belonging to the service enjoy the curious privilege of preferentially appointing themselves to the pilotage charge of any vessel that may come into the Sandheads, while they happen to be in the pilot brig; and the result is, that one of these three gentlemen might make half-a-dozen trips in a month, and thus earn an income of Rs. 1,000, or more, while a master pilot, whose "turn" it may be in theory to get the next in-coming ship, does not get her, and perhaps receives no income whatever during the whole month. We have taken an extreme case, since most pilots do receive some income every month; but the case which we have supposed is perfectly possible, and has sometimes occurred; and we maintain that the occurrence of such a case ought to be impossible. It is surely possible to effect a graduated division of the aggregate sum of pilotage charges, which will not be disfigured by the spectacle of a few men regularly receiving extravagant incomes, while the majority of the officers are condemned to live on mere pittance. If the generosity of the three privileged pilots does not prompt them to waive their privilege, when it operates with undue rigour against others, some rule should be enforced in the matter. Furthermore, it seems to us that all admissions to the service should be put a stop to for the present, and that, while superfluous senior officers are pensioned off, some arrangement should at once be made, under which either all pilots will receive fixed salaries according to their grade or length of service, or the aggregate of their pilotage charge will be more reasonably divided between all the members of the service than it can be said to be at present. It is our intention to place this scandal clearly before the Government from time to time, until the evil to which we refer is taken in hand and removed.

THE NATIVE INDIAN ARMY.

The Indian Daily News holds that while the question of a European force for India is under discussion, the claims of the Native army to attention ought not to be overlooked. The fact may call up many indignant denials, but it will not be the less a fact, that the condition and temper of that army is not satisfactory; and this is specially the case in the Madras Presidency. The present organisation places a gulf between the European officer and the native soldiers, which native officers cannot bridge over, but which they define with exactness. We would be glad to see some steps taken to remove this, as it seems to us, fatal blot in the system. What has been done in the Native army is simply an endeavour to make irregularism take the place and preserve the appearance of regularism. The result has been that all the faults of the old Native army have been exaggerated, and its one great merit, of close acquaintance between the English officer and the sepoy has been swept away. Then again, we have never yet seen on paper any plan for reserves for the Native army. There is no reserve, and it seems to be agreed, though we do not know on what grounds, that there can be no reserve. Yet a standing army without reserves is the very evil which statesmen in England are seeking to cure, and unless one is bold enough to declare that the Native Indian army is sufficient for all fates, it is difficult indeed to understand why it should stand isolated, and with nothing but the rawest of raw recruits to fall back upon if need should arise. Lastly, even to-day, there are Native regiments armed with the old smooth-bore musket. In a great many the old smooth-bore has been replaced by an old Enfield. Why, we should ask, should not Native troops be armed with breech-loaders; give them, if you will, an inferior weapon, but give them weapons which shall do away with the danger of different sorts of ammunition, and bring them up to the standard of other armies. If Lord Northbrook will only put his hand to the work, he has, in the many great army questions pressing on the attention of the Government, an opportunity greater than that which he turned to such good account in the House of Lords.

VIENNA EXHIBITION.—It is said that the Viceroy has sanctioned an expenditure of a lakh of rupees for the purposes of purchasing and forwarding Indian produce and articles of art and manufacture to the Vienna Exhibition. Bombay gets Rs. 15,000, Bengal Rs. 18,000, Madras Rs. 17,000, Punjab Rs. 12,000, North-Western Provinces Rs. 10,000, and so on.

FEVER IN PUNA.—We are sorry to be informed by the Deccan Herald that fever is very prevalent just now in Puna, both among natives and Europeans. In every house either one member of the family or one of the servants is suffering from it. The great range of the thermometer is the cause of it. It is sometimes bitterly cold at night, and the past two mornings have been so hazy that the sun has not shone in its full strength through the gloom until nearly breakfast time. The poor natives, in their scanty apparel, shiver with cold till the sun comes out in all its power at mid-day. There is a range of twenty degrees in the thermometer during the twenty-four hours—rather too great a shock to the strongest constitution, and very trying to the poorly-fed natives. No wonder that they now suffer more during the cold weather than in the hottest season of the year.

THE GAIKWAR'S ABSENCE FROM BOMBAY.—Our readers must have noticed that many reasons have been mentioned as being given by his Highness to account for his absence, and there has been a great deal of speculation as to what the real cause is—more speculation amongst the natives than Europeans can generally be aware of. Europeans, as a rule, we daresay, may be inclined to look upon the absence of the Gaikwar as of but little consequence, but such a matter is discussed and commented on, amongst the natives, even to the lower strata, and is looked upon by many as a defiance of or insult to the British Government. Knowing that such is the way in which the absence of his Highness will be regarded by the people generally, the Government will probably take some steps to let H. H. Mulharao understand that he has incurred its displeasure. The first excuse of his Highness was the sickness of the Rance and her approaching confinement, and after her premature delivery he pleaded that religion prevented his leaving home for forty days, a plea which is well known to be invalid. The child has since died, so that at the last moment a valid excuse presented itself. But we are informed on excellent authority that the Government is of opinion that neither of these excuses represented the true cause of his Highness's absence. The Gaikwar, it is suspected, declined to come because his absurd claim to put his Excellency the Governor of Bombay on his left in open durbar had been negatived! The left would imply inferiority, and it appears that the Peishwa in old times turned the Gaikwar out of his seat at his own durbar, and taking the post of honour himself, gave the Gaikwar (in reality his host) a place on his right as if he were guest, the Peishwa scorned to appear as the guest of his subordinate. This of course made the Peishwa sit on the left of the Gaikwar, though there is no doubt as to which occupied the inferior position. The British Government does not like to turn a man out of a seat in his own house, so that the Gaikwar in his own durbars sits in the seat of honour and claims to put his most illustrious guest on the left, ignoring that the guest has not put him (the host) out of his seat. This reason could not be alleged, but it was well known. Then it is believed that his Highness does not like meeting Scindia and the great ones of India. We have it besides on good authority from Baroda that Mulharao was strongly advised by the resident to come, but that some of his Ministers were against it. Whether his Highness declined to come from thoughtlessness only or from a deliberate wish to assert his position, his action will probably be looked upon as a slight sufficient to cause some remonstrance on the part of our Government.—Bombay Gazette.

Bengal.

DEATH OF MR. BUTLER.—Mr. Butler, Extra Assistant Commissioner of Peshawur, died of Peshawur fever in the dak bungalow at Attock half an hour after his arrival on the night of the 18th Nov.

MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.—The Maharajah of Vizianagram, with his son and some of the ladies of the harem, arrived at Agra on the 13th Nov. on a visit to the Maharajah of Jeypore, whose niece is about to marry the Maharajah of Vizianagram's son. The nuptials are to be celebrated with great magnificence.

MR. BRANDIS, the head of the Forest Department, returns to India in April next, when the present officiating incumbent, Mr. Baden Powell, proceeds on furlough. Mr. Powell is the writer of some charming papers on cedars in Mountain Echoes.—Indian Daily News, Nov. 20.

CIVIL.—On the return of Mr. W. M. Low, Commissioner of the Nerbudda Division, Mr. W. B. Jones will succeed Mr. Pedder as Commissioner of the Nagpore Division. In the meantime Col. J. N. H. Maclean will officiate as Commissioner of the Nagpore Division.

DEATH-RATE IN THE PUNJAB.—During the week ended the 26th of October, the number of deaths from cholera in the Punjab fell from 253 in the previous week to 112, and in the week ended the 2nd of November to 74. Jallandar and Peshawur accounted for 64 of the deaths during the latter week. The general health of the people was also improving, though slowly.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR PIG-STICKING.—The Englishman is very sarcastic on certain individuals who went out some time last week from Barrackpore on elephants to shoot pigs. "As a further protection against these infuriated and dangerous animals," says our contemporary, "they were accompanied by a guard of sepoys armed with muskets and bayonets. The next time they go out the party had better take one of the trained nurses from the hospital with them in case of accidents."

SILK IN KASHMIR.—Very favourable reports are said to have been made of the silk grown in the territories of the Maharajah of Kashmir. From some of the samples sent to England the silk brokers have valued the better class of silk at Rs. 23 to Rs. 24 per pound. This will be acceptable intelligence to the Maharajah, but the brokers think that, in order to take a good place in the markets, his Highness should employ men (French or Italian) versed in sericulture to teach the people of Kashmir.

KANGRA TEAS.—We learn from Peshawur that there is a considerable demand for Kangra teas there, to be sent over the frontier. It is reported that the flavour of the Kangra tea has met with much appreciation in the Bokhara market, and that the traders are instructed to purchase it in the Punjab in preference to the down country or China teas. For the benefit of the struggling planters, who this year have for the first time made really a great start, we trust the above is true in its entirety.

ECCLESIASTICAL.—We are able to state that the Rev. J. Stephenson, M.A., has been obliged on account of ill-health to take sick leave to England, and to resign his appointment of chaplain of the Calcutta Volunteers; and that the Rev. J. Welland, M.A., of the old Mission Church, has accepted the appointment, subject to the approval of his Excellency the Viceroy, and Colonel of the Regiment. Mr. Stephenson leaves Calcutta on Tuesday or Wednesday next by the Coromandel.—Indian Daily News, Nov. 22.

THE BENGAL POLICE.—The memorial to the Lieutenant-Governor praying him to reserve the appointments in the Bengal Civil Constabulary for officers who have been trained in the service and belonged to it, has been signed by some thirty or forty officers of high standing in the service, and will probably be signed by as many more as it will be possible to reach from Calcutta before the memorial is presented. We wish the memorialists every success.—Indian Daily News.

CIVIL.—The Calcutta correspondent of a contemporary says that Mr. Dampier, having inherited some extensive property in the South of France, will retire from the service next year, and that he will, therefore, not be reappointed temporarily to the vacant Secretaryship to the Indian Government in the Home Department. Mr. Elliot, the able Secretary to the Government of the N.W.P., will be the man for it. But why are not these higher secretaryships given to the members of the Madras or the Bombay Civil Services?

HORSES IN THE PUNJAB.—The Lieutenant-Governor has taken one step at least to preserve a decent breed of horses in the Punjab. It is the practice to brand mares brought to the Government stallions by zemindars, in order to afford recognition of the animals when they are brought with their progeny to public fairs or offered for private sale. These mares being mostly good animals are often picked out by remount officers for remount purposes. His Honour has issued an order that when these branded mares are brought to public sales their purchase for remount purposes is "absolutely prohibited." In the army they would of course be useless for reproduction, but this order ensures their remaining with the zemindars for stock purposes.

A CRY FROM THE POLICE.—The Pioneer publishes the following letter:—Honoured Sir,—A poor man's distressings who will heer, you will I am shur, nobel sir. I have been in many polices, also millitery for 25 years. The curnels sahebs of the police is known me very well, that I am man of excelent behavings, and therefore I am promoshuned to head cunstabul and now penshund. My big son is 23 year old, of brite ornamental appearence, so that all men who seas him is making bobree of his buty. He is now oomaidwar in—police for by next Phagoon, two year. Getting hopes but no sitwashon. Lately the Sheristadar, Mahommedan by caste, is recommended one man to Superintendent, and he got constabul's place. This is man of bad behavings, and wunce driven out of police, and twice sent to jail, and now he gone out to towse with Sheristadar for reezon all knowing to peoples here. When reched man of bad behavings get place and not sons of old good behavings servant of the Sirkar, than how we will furnish foods for our generashun to come into the world. The ends of such ackts is not looking nise to poor man's fortunes, and allways troubles his guts. If I am telling you one wurd of lie, you can blow me from the cannun. A Pen-shuned Head Cunstabul.

FLOOD AT PONDICHERRY.—A correspondent at Pondicherry informs us that the town was flooded last Saturday by heavy rains, and that about a hundred houses were destroyed. The active exertions of the engineers alone prevented more serious injury. There have been several cases of "supposed dengue" at Pondicherry—believed to have been imported from Madras.—Madras Times, Nov. 30.

COAL AT MOULMEIN.—Mr. Mark Fryer, Mining Engineer, Burmah, has discovered, says the Friend of India, that coal is, to a considerable extent, associated with the strata of shale and sandstone in Moulmein. A specimen was sent for analysis to Dr. T. Oldham, who reports that the coal is made up of the following parts:—Moisture 6.8, Volatile matter 30.0, Carbon 59.2, Ash, 4.0, total 100.0. It is light, brittle, and remarkably free from ash as compared with ordinary Indian coal, and will, Dr. Oldham thinks, prove a good useful fuel, if procurable in any large quantity. In the specimen sent there was scarcely a trace of sulphur, but a distinctly ferruginous tint was observed in the ashes.

MILITARY.—We learn on good authority, says the Indian Daily News, that the Chief Commissioner of Burmah has applied to the Government of India to have Bengal sepoy's substituted for the Madras troops now serving in that province. The reasons assigned by the Hon. A. Eden must be "supposed." When a foreign lady was asked the duties of a cavalier servente, her naive reply was, "I beseech you to suppose them." Not wishing to offend the feelings of the Coast Army, we must allow our readers to imagine the reasons which have probably influenced the Chief Commissioner in this matter.—We learn by special telegram that the 89th Regiment, under the command of Colonel Boyle, arrived on the morning of November 29 at Bangalore from Cannanore. The bands of the Fusiliers and the Hussars played the 89th into the cantonment.

THE HEAVY RAINS.—Yesterday was one continuous downpour of heavy rain, and a large quantity of water must have fallen. The country all along the south-west line of the railway is under water, and we need not be surprised to hear of a break on the line. A good deal of anxiety has been felt about the condition of the large Chindrambankum Tank. This tank is fed by a channel from the Courtelliar River, which channel was closed on the tank getting full. The other day, however, the river burst its bounds, and filled the tank almost to overflowing, and some difficulty was experienced in letting off the surplus waters without injury to the bund. This tank requires the greatest watchfulness, as we believe that any accident to it would be far more disastrous to some of the suburbs of Madras than anything that could result from a bursting of the Red Hills Tank.—Madras Times, Nov. 28.

DEATH OF MAJOR STEVENSON.—We regret to announce the death, on last Monday night, of Major E. B. Stevenson—one of the few remaining institutions of the quaint old Danish Settlement of Tranquebar. The deceased gentleman, it is said, fell a victim to intemperance in the public service! "He was," writes our correspondent, "one of the most active, energetic, and enthusiastic members of the Local Fund Board of the district, and, in his zeal to advance the interests of his foster town, and to embellish and renovate it, he neglected his health, and resisted the entreaties of his relatives and friends to rest, until it was too late. The universal esteem in which he was held was testified by his funeral, which was attended by every one in Tranquebar, from the greatest to the least, and by the principal functionaries from the neighbouring town of Karikal, who—with the graceful courtesy of French gentlemen—had braved the inclemency of the weather, and the horrors of a detestable road, to pay their last tribute of respect to the good old gentleman.—Madras Times, Nov. 30.

WRECK OF THE "HURKARU."—The British ship Hurkaru, belonging to Messrs. John Allan and Sons, of London, has been wrecked during the late storm at a place about eighty miles south of Madras. Yesterday week the commander of the Hurkaru, in obedience to signals from the master attendant, put to sea for the purpose of avoiding the risk of being driven ashore by the pending storm, as well as to get clear of the bad weather, if such were possible. Unfortunately the vessel seems to have got into worse weather than we had in Madras. The probability, therefore, is that had she not put out to sea she might have been saved. The Hurkaru was the only vessel in the roads at the time, the commander of which, in obedience to the master attendant's signal, did not hold on to her anchorage. The whole of the vessels who held on are safe. During the cyclone of May last our readers will recollect that the ships then in the roads did not put to sea because the master attendant did not signal to them to do so until it was too late. Had he, however, done so earlier, and they had put to sea, who can tell what the consequences might have been? Judging from the fate of the Hurkaru it is not unlikely that the hundreds of lives which were saved from the wrecks in Madras might, had the vessels put to sea, have been lost. Will the master attendant be now blamed for ordering the vessels to sea, as he was in May last for not ordering to sea the vessels which were then in the Roads?—Athenæum, Nov. 30.

FOOD IN BURMAH.—In his annual health report the Civil Surgeon of Bassein makes the following remarks on the food of the Burmans:—Supply, ample as to quantity but often indifferent to bad as to quality. Price, such as brings an ample supply of nourishment within the means of all, even of the idle and least useful members of the community. Animal food is abundant, but inferior in quality. No attempt is made to produce good wholesome butchers' meat, except pork, the trade in which is in the hands of Chinese, who supply freely and at reasonable prices. The beef is sorry stuff, and of mutton the supply is virtually nil. The value of goat's flesh is not understood, from want of culture and attention to the business. It thus happens that a large quantity of meat finds purchasers in the market that ought to be condemned as unfit for food. It is, I believe, deemed advisable to refer to the popular opinion in this respect, even to the extent of suffering carcasses of diseased animals to be sold to Burmans who have no sort of hesitation in eating it, no matter what disease may have been the cause of death. I have myself seen the flesh on animals that had died from rinderpest eagerly sought after by these people, and I should add I have not been able to discover after some care in the inquiry that it did them any harm. Vegetables,—both animal and vegetable food is often consumed in a state of decomposition so far advanced as to be most offensive to the uninitiated. To fish also this same remark applies. In short, the Burmese as a people may be said to be dirty feeders, though at the same time truth compels me to say they are more robust and active than the natives of India generally. Nor have I ever been able to trace any of their ailments to improper food.

LORD HOBART AND THE POOR OF MADRAS.—We are glad to be able to state that after his arrival from Ooty Lord Hobart has done some good to our city. On Sunday last his Lordship wrote to Colonel Ritherdon, the President of the local Municipality, through Mr. J. C. Loch, Private Secretary, requesting the President to adopt some measures for the relief of the poor of Madras, who have become quite destitute in consequence of the recent heavy floods in Madras. Colonel Ritherdon upon this wrote to Mr. Bazley, the Secretary of the Civil Orphan Asylums, asking him for the building lately occupied by the inmates of the Asylum, for the accommodation of the poor of Madras, who suffered much during the late rain. Mr. Bazley in reply stated that the building was made over to Government, and that the Collector of Madras was the custodian of the property. This information having been communicated to Lord Hobart, his Lordship at once ordered that the poor be accommodated in the Civil Orphan Asylum buildings and the Mint stalls. A wealthy and respectable native gentleman, named Veeraperumall Pillay, also came forward and generously placed the late Lunatic Asylum building at the disposal of the Municipality for this purpose. A large number of poor families found their way into these buildings on Sunday night, and others again took refuge in them yesterday. Lord Hobart and the Honorable R. S. Ellis, accompanied by Colonel Ritherdon, Major Bowen, and Mr. Dalyell, went out in different directions in two parties on Sunday, and inspected some of the parishes that had suffered most severely. Money was distributed to the most destitute of the poor who had taken refuge in the Civil Orphan Asylum buildings and in the late Lunatic Asylum, and Messrs. Stephenson and Ross were appointed to look after them. Those that are very poor will be supplied with tats and bamboos for the re-construction of their huts. —Athenæum, Nov. 30.

THE VICEROY'S PROGRESS.

THE VICEROY AT PUNA.—THE REVIEW.

PUNA, Nov. 25.—One of those great military displays which the gathering together of a considerable body of troops and the presence of some great dignitary alone brings forth, has just taken place in Puna, and I may safely say that since the days of Lord Frederick Fitzclarence a scene equal to that of this evening has not been presented to the public view on the grand parade ground of this large cantonment. The garrison of this place, together with that of the neighbouring artillery station of Kirkee, is at all times large, but on the present occasion Nuggur, Baroda, and other stations have been called on to add their quota to the assembled force, and the result has been the assemblage on parade of a body of highly disciplined soldiers of all arms, which any man, no matter how high his station, might have been gratified to review, and any general proud to command. Among the staff and in command were men whose breasts bore witness of their presence at many a well-fought field; and in the ranks the medalled veteran was not wanting. Side by side stood men white and of darker hue but with recollections in common of dangers boldly encountered and resolutely overcome.

The Governor-General arrived on the ground very punctually at the appointed hour, when a royal salute announced his presence on the scene. When the salute had been fired, the Commander-in-Chief advanced and exchanged courtesies with Lord Northbrook, after which they galloped to the right of the line, a brilliant cortège following. This was the order of march directed to be observed on the occasion:—

The Assistant Quarter-Master General, Puna Division.

Detachment Body Guard.

Governor-General's Led Horses.

Aides-de-Camp to the Viceroy.

The Deputy Adjutant-General and Deputy Quarter-Master General of the Army.

The Adjutant-General. The Military Secretary to the Governor. The Military Secretary to the Viceroy.

Native Princes and Chiefs.

General Officers off Duty.

Colonels on the Staff.

The Assistant-Adjutant-General. The Assistant Adjutant-General,

General, Head-quarters. Royal Arty. Head-quarters.

Personal Staff—General Officers off Duty.

Detachment Body Guard.

No other officers, unless specially invited, were permitted to ride down the line on this occasion.

The six infantry corps were then formed up in columns of brigades, and after the Artillery and Cavalry had passed the flag-staff they also moved on. Meanwhile the massed bands of the various corps present at the parade played a march. It was at this period of the review that I was particularly struck with the brilliance of the spectacle, and it was one that was constantly presenting fresh features of interest and combination of colour.—Times of India Correspondent.

THE BALL AT GOVERNMENT HOUSE.

His Excellency Sir Philip Wodehouse gave a ball on Friday evening, the 22nd, at Gunness Khind, in honour of the Viceroy. It was one of the most brilliant that has taken place for many a day in Poona. All the residents of the Deccan capital were invited and the arrangement were perfect. On entering the drawing-room one was quite dazzled by the brilliancy of the light of the chandeliers. The gay uniform of the officers, the court dresses of the civilians, mingled with the various gorgeous and tasteful dresses of the ladies, was a sight that baffles description. "Fair women and brave men" truly, but amid all this gaiety the most pleasing sight was the many smiling genial faces. The Viceroy, on entering, was received by everyone rising as a mark of respect, which he in his position well deserves. He wore the light-blue ribbon with the G.C.S.I.-ship order of the Star of India. Though not so commanding in figure and height as our worthy Governor, his face beams with intellect, and one could see at once that her Gracious Majesty had entrusted her Indian Empire to the care of a wise, a firm, and enlarged mind. The ball was opened by his Excellency the Viceroy dancing a quadrille with the Honorable Mrs. Bonar Deane, Lady Louisa Hall and the Military Secretary to the Viceroy being their vis-a-vis; the honorable H. B. Ellis with Mrs. Arthur completing the set with two others. His Excellency the Viceroy must have been highly pleased at the hearty and affectionate manner with which he was greeted by everyone present on Friday evening.—Deccan Herald, Nov. 25.

THE VICEROY'S VISIT TO SIR JAMSETJEE JEEJEEBHAY, BART.

On his Excellency's return from the Parade Ground to Gunness Khind he paid a visit to the mansion-house of Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, Bart., Sir Jamsetjee having invited his Lordship to honour the house which had belonged to his illustrious father with a visit. The following gentlemen were invited to meet the distinguished guest:—Messrs. Byramjee Jejeebhoy, Dinshaw and Nuseerwanjee Petit, Khan Bahadoor Puddumjee Pestonjee, Khan Bahadoor Dustoor Noshervanjee Jamasp, Dorabjee Pestonjee, Merwanjee Framjee Panday, Ardaseer Sett Cursetjee, Nanabhoj Byramjee Jejeebhoy, Dhunjeeshaw Jamsetjee, Pestonjee Hormusjee Cama, Dorabjee Puddomjee, &c. His Excellency the Viceroy, accompanied by Sir Philip Wodehouse, arrived at the Fountain Hall at a little before half-past six o'clock, and was received at the entrance by Sir Jamsetjee, who conducted him to a sofa prepared for his Lordship. Sir Philip Wodehouse was seated on the left and Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy on the right of his Excellency the Viceroy. After conversing a few minutes, bouquets of flowers, garlands, and rose-water were distributed, and then their Excellencies entered their carriage and drove off to Gunness Khind, his Excellency the Viceroy's body guard attending upon him as usual. The Fountain Hall was elegantly decorated and lighted up on the occasion. It will be remembered that H.R.H. Prince Alfred paid a special visit to Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy at Khandalla about two years ago.—Deccan Herald, Nov. 27.

DEPARTURE OF H.E. THE VICEROY FROM POONA.

His Excellency the Viceroy left the Kirkee Station yesterday morning punctually at seven o'clock (railway time). The difference between railway and local time perplexed the inhabitants, and especially the visitors from Bombay, where local time is invariably kept, so that very few were present on the platform except the railway officials who came from Poona with the train. Before its arrival we observed on the platform Colonel Hume Henderson, Superintendent of Police; Dr. Fraser, Railway Magistrate; Mr. A. H. Leith Fraser, B.C.S. and Khan Bahadoor Puddumjee Pestonjee, &c., &c. His Excellency the Governor-General and suite, Mr. Aitchison Foreign Secretary, the Honourable B. H. Ellis, General Norman, and his Excellency the Governor of Bombay and suite, arrived at the Kirkee station at 6.30 (local time), and were received on the platform by Mr. LeMessurier, Mr. Wilson Bell, Captain Babington, and others of the Railway staff who had come from Poona in charge of the special train which had been prepared for his Excellency the Viceroy. All the arrangements for the Viceroy's departure were completed before the arrival of Lord Northbrook from Gunness Khind, so that no time was wasted at the station. His Lordship merely shook hands with those on the platform who were waiting to receive him, stepped at once into the carriage, and then the train steamed off. A salute of twenty-one guns was fired from the Kirkee Battery in honour of his lordship's departure.—Deccan Herald, Nov. 27.

STATION TALK.

CAMP BARODA, Nov. 30.—A gloom has been cast over this little camp by the unexpected death of Dr. Miller, Residency Surgeon, from paralysis last evening. He was taken suddenly ill on last Sunday night, and, though everything was done that medical skill could suggest, he fell a victim to the disease. By the death of Dr. Miller, in the prime of life, the station has been deprived of a kind and generous-hearted gentleman. For the short time Dr. Miller has been here he has gained the good will of all those who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. This is the fourth death we have sustained within the short period of six months. This is sad indeed, Dr. Johnstone, of Broach, was in attendance on Dr. Miller for a day or two, when Surgeon Seward, from Bombay, was sent here to relieve him. But all their skill unfortunately proved of no avail. It is hoped that Dr. Johnstone may be appointed Civil Surgeon of Broach, to the vacant place, for Dr. Johnstone was here before with H.M.'s 26th Regiment, and his kind and willing attendance on all those who sought his advice and aid has elicited the praise of this community, and they would one and all rejoice to see him back again amongst them. The mornings and evenings are pleasant now, and fever is fast disappearing.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

PILGRIMS FROM TURKISTAN.—A number of pilgrims from Turkistan, in larger force than have ever collected in any previous year, are now passing through the Punjab on their way to Bombay with the intention of visiting Mecca. They report the arrival of a very few Russian caravans, and the consequently larger demand for English piece-goods and for the Indian hill teas which are now coming into great requisition in Central Asia.

ARRIVAL OF THE TROOP-SHIP "CROCODILE."—H.M.'s troop-ship Crocodile, 4,013 tons, 700 H.P., Captain G. H. Parkin, arrived in Bombay on November 25, from England. She left Portsmouth on the 19th October, Queenstown on the 25th October, Malta on the 5th November, and Suez on the 10th November. During the voyage there were three deaths and one birth. She brings 38 officers, 13 ladies, and 7 children, and 1,009 men, 110 women and 40 children.

DEATH OF LIEUTENANT POWER.—We regret to announce the death of Lieutenant Gervoise Barker Power, of the Royal Artillery, which event occurred at Mhow on the night of the 25th inst., through his jumping down a well. The previous day he attempted to shoot himself, but the ball only grazed his forehead. No reason can be given for this rash act, unless it be that he received bad news from home by the mail which reached Mhow on Saturday evening last. The deceased was a promising young officer, and was attached to the 1st Battery, 6th Brigade.—Times of India, Dec. 2.

DELAYS IN THE MAILS.—It will be remembered that the Surat mail steamer with the mails of Oct. 4 reached Bombay four or five days after the proper time, and that a representation was made to the Director-General of Post-offices in India, signed by a number of the passengers. A reply has just been sent by the Director-General, from which we quote the following passage:—"The entire control of British packet service being in the hands of the British post-office, it is out of my power to take any direct action in the matter, but I have forwarded a copy of your letter to the Secretary, General Post-office, London, in view to the subject being brought under the consideration of her Majesty's Postmaster General."

A PARSEE JOURNALIST'S OPINION OF THE AGE.—The orthodox Jam-i-Jamshed does not seem to appreciate the part taken by a Parsee lady the other day in Signor Marras's concert. It says:—"A Parsee lady, the wife of Bomonjee Cursetjee Bhandoopwalla, contrary to the usages and etiquette of her caste, sang the other day at the concert of Signor Marras. The well-wishers of the Parsee community are much pained by her appearance, and say that she has not set any good example to her sisters. Parsee males and Parsee females thoughtlessly ape English manners, which we are sure will never end in any good. We trust the appearance of Mrs. Bomonjee will be her first and last, and no lady of respectable family will follow her example."—Our daily Guzerati contemporary, the Jam-i-Jamshed, is in ecstasies at the so-called dignified conduct of H.H. the Begum of Bhopal in having put on a veil during the Durbar ceremonies. It says:—"Although the Begum appears in public with perfect freedom she sticks to her caste customs and etiquette, and thinks it dignified to go about with a veil on her face. Being an independent ruler she can very easily join in balls and concerts without a veil, if so disposed, but she appears too sensible to follow the disgusting practice of several ladies who ape English manners. There were people in Saturday's Durbar who were anxious to catch a glimpse of her intellectual face, but to their great disappointment she appeared in a veil with perfect decorum. Those who saw this mannerly and well-behaved lady showered praises on her, and unanimously exclaimed that she had shown herself to better advantage with a veil than without it."

THE OLD WRECKS IN THE BAY.—The heavy sea caused by the late rough weather in the Bay has disturbed several of the wrecks lying close to the shore, but whether these wrecks have been hereby brought nearer to the land we cannot say for certain, although it appears so. The road along the part of the beach continuous to the Fort and Black Town is still in a shocking state; and every heavy downpour of rain deepens the crevices which sear it.—Athenæum.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

GARRISON INSTRUCTION.

The examination of officers attending garrison instruction will commence on Tuesday, Oct. 15, under detailed instructions, which will be communicated to the general officers commanding the Poona and Mhow divisions.

The boards of examination will be detailed as far as possible, in conformity with paragraph VII. Horse Guards G.O. No. 65 of 1870. The president should in all cases be a field officer of artillery, or an officer of similar rank who has passed the staff college.

Garrison instructors will report to the officer commanding the station the date on which the examination may conclude, in order that the officers composing the class may be directed to rejoin their regiments without delay.

The next course of garrison instruction will commence on Nov. 1, and general officers commanding divisions and districts will send to the adjt. gen. on Oct. 1 the names of the officers selected to go through the course, in conformity with rules laid down in paragraph 9 of G.O.C. No. 725 of 1871.

PENSIONS AND GRATUITIES.

Oct. 2.—No. 3,282.—The Governor General in Council directs that Rule 4 of section 66, Civil Pension Code be cancelled, and that the following rules be added to the Code:—

Section 46, Rule 3.—If an officer has held more than one appointment, in respect of each of which, if he had held it separately and alone, pension or gratuity would have been admissible to him, the pension or gratuity or pension and gratuity, admissible to him is the sum of the several pensions or gratuities, or pensions and gratuities, which would have been admissible to him if he had held each office separately and alone.

The consolidated pension thus admissible is subject to the Rules 56 (b) and (c), limiting its amount to a certain maximum fixed with reference to length of service and average emoluments.

An officer is not entitled, for service in an office conjointly with another office, to any pension or gratuity which would not have been admissible to him if he had held the office separately and alone.

Section 96 A.—An officer holding two or more separate appointments may not, save with the express sanction of the Government of India in the financial department, receive a pension or gratuity in respect to one or more of such appointments, without retiring from the service altogether. There is no objection to his being relieved from one or more of such appointments at any time, without being compelled to leave the service altogether: but, in such case, any pension or gratuity which may be admissible to him in respect to the office or offices of which he is relieved, will be deferred until he finally retires.

(Signed) R. B. CHAPMAN,

Secretary to the Government of India.

The following is to be added as a note under Rule 1 of Section 53 of the Civil Pension Code:—

NOTE.—The Secretary of State wrote regarding this rule thus in Public Despatch No. 87, dated Aug. 8, 1872:—I trust that the various Governments and Administrations will always be disposed to extend to this rule a very liberal interpretation, and that the State may in no case be deprived of the valuable experience of really efficient native officers by the untimely exercise of the powers of compulsory retirement on pension.

potent to award.—(Signed) A. SPENCER, Lieutenant general, Commander in Chief, Bombay. Official Papers.

THE DUKE OF ARGYLL'S REPLY TO THE MADRAS MEMORIAL.

The following is a despatch from the Right hon. the Secretary of State for India to H.E. the Right hon. the Governor in Council, Fort St. George, dated India Office, London, October 16, 1872, No. 113 (Financial):—

I have considered in Council your public letter, dated July 12 last, No. 18, forwarding a memorial for certain European and East Indian inhabitants of the Madras Presidency praying for a definition of the term "Natives of India," as used in the official correspondence of the Government of India referred to by the memorialists.

2. That correspondence related to the grant of leave of absence to members of the uncovenanted service, and to the necessity which existed for laying down rules to meet the cases of educational officers and some other uncovenanted servants, with special qualifications, whose services had been obtained in this country, as well as the general body of uncovenanted servants, including natives of India and some Europeans.

3. In dealing with this subject I deemed it necessary to guard against the application of the benefits of the rules which were framed to meet the cases of Europeans specially qualified and appointed from England to other Europeans who entered the service under entirely different conditions, and I, therefore, in a financial despatch dated the 6th December, 1871, No. 451, desired that it might be regarded as a general principle, not hereafter to be departed from, that Europeans "appointed in India to offices should receive no greater advantages of any kind, furlough, of course, included, than would be enjoyed by natives holding such posts or offices."

4. The Act 33 Vic. cap. 3, referred to by the memorialists, had been previously passed (on March 25, 1870), and, in reference to the employment of natives of India of proved merit and ability in the Civil Service in India, it provided that the words "the Natives of India" should "include any person born and domiciled within the dominions of her Majesty in India, of parents habitually resident in India and not established there for temporary purposes only."

5. It was not my intention to modify in any way the definition of the term "Natives of India," as contained in that Act; and it is obvious, from the correspondence, that it was my desire to secure to them increased employment in the service of Government.

6. You will acquaint the memorialists accordingly.

THE DEATH OF SIR DONALD M'LEOD.—OFFICIAL INQUIRY.

The investigation ordered by the Board of Trade with regard to the circumstances of the accident that led to the death of Sir Donald M'Leod at the Gloucester-road Station of the Metropolitan District Railway, was resumed on Saturday at the Offices of the Board. Captain Tyler, with the assistance of Mr. Cumberland, barrister, conducted the inquiry.

Dr. Lankester, Coroner for Central Middlesex, tendered evidence in regard to the general character of such accidents as that which happened to Sir D. M'Leod. He thought the practice of trying to enter or leave a carriage while it was in motion was very much fostered by the example of porters and guards, who seemed as if they were desirous of demonstrating the facility with which it might be done. He was convinced, since his attention had been turned to the subject, that something might be effected in the way of preventing the result of this carelessness and inattention on the part of the public, by placing a prolonged footboard from one end of the carriages to the other. He did not say that it would altogether prevent accidents, because people were occasionally knocked down by the doors and steps of the carriages, and he had a case then under investigation in which a man had died from injuries inflicted in that way. He thought the prolonged footboard should be above the platform, as, if placed below, old and infirm persons might get their feet caught by the edge of the platform in stepping upon the footboard, and that it should project three or four inches over it. He had seen a railway in the Channel Islands, in Guernsey, constructed in that way, and though the traffic was immense no accident had ever happened. He had gone into the question whether accidents occurred most frequently at high or low platforms, and on which lines they occurred most frequently, but he thought they were the least frequent on the North London, considering their traffic. He would suggest that trains should never start till the platform was clear, and that the public should be impressed with the fact that the farther they were from a moving carriage the better.

Mr. G. Twynan, who stated that he was a frequent traveller on the Metropolitan District Railway, complained that sufficient time was not allowed to get into carriages safely.

Mr. Neele, General Passenger Superintendent of the London and North-Western Railway Company, announced that his company had decided to adopt the suggestion of a continuous footboard.

After a long conversation, 3ft. 1½ in. was accepted as a standard height for the platforms on the lines connected with the Metropolitan and Metropolitan District systems, and 2ft. 4½ in. as the standard distance of the platform from the rails. The question whether the continuous footboards should be above or below the edge of the platform was then discussed. Captain Tyler and the majority of the professional gentlemen favoured its being above, but Mr. Fowler, C.E., rather preferred its being below, and expressed a strong opinion against its being used as a step in any case. As to a footboard level with the platform, and as near to the edge as possible, he insisted that it would throw every one down who happened to step partly upon it and partly upon the platform if there was the slightest movement of the train. Finally, it was decided that the continuous footboard should be fixed at 3ft. 4½ in. high when the carriages are unloaded, bringing it, with the springs down, about one inch above the level of the highest platform on the Metropolitan system. In the interests of the public Mr. Fowler desired it should be made known that there was peculiar danger in getting into or leaving a carriage while in motion on the Metropolitan Railway, because the engines, being made especially powerful for the traffic, a train, immediately on starting, acquired rapid motion as compared with an ordinary train; and, in the same way, it was going rapidly on reaching a station, there being exceedingly powerful breaks to stop it in a shorter space than on an ordinary railway.

Captain Tyler said the rule as to starting trains on the Metropolitan Railway, for which he had asked at the last meeting, had been furnished him, and he found that "all drivers when on a journey will be under the control of the guard in charge of the train, and must receive instructions only from him as to starting. The guard must be especially careful not to give the signal until he is quite certain the station signal is at caution, and that all the passengers are in the carriages and the doors all closed." This, said Captain Tyler, was an excellent rule, but it was not so much obeyed as it ought to be, since he had seen guards start the trains when he was getting in, and when doors were not shut. He thought it would be wise that a little more supervision should be exercised over the guards in this matter.

Colonel Innes, relative of Sir Donald M'Leod, said he had been watching the Gloucester-road Station ever since the accident, and declared that the presence of three trains at once was a matter of constant occurrence. Although he believed that it was true, as had been stated, that the accident to Sir Donald M'Leod was his own fault, so much had been said about the conduct of passengers in getting in and out of trains in motion, that he wished to point out they were not altogether to blame. There was a rule that a train should not start until it was ready; but he was able to say, from his own observation, that that rule was habitually violated, and that the short time of stopping at the platform obliged people often to get in and out while the train was in motion.

Captain Tyler said that the only thing which remained was to draw the attention of the other companies using the Metropolitan lines, namely, the Midland, the Great Northern, and the London, Chatham, and Dover, to what they had just agreed to do as regarded continuous footboards, and to ascertain whether they would consent to add them to their carriages. He thought there would be no difficulty in their doing so now that a standard height and distance had been agreed upon.

The proceedings then terminated.

Miscellaneous.

THE ASSAM COMPANY.—The directors of the Assam Company have resolved to pay an interim dividend of 5 per cent., being £1 per share.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.—The Great Indian Peninsula Railway traffic return, for the week ending the 26th October, exhibits a decrease of £2,824.

BRITISH INDIAN EXTENSION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The directors of the British Indian Extension Telegraph Company have declared a further interim dividend of 6s. per share on account of the profits for the year ending 31st December, 1872.

ARRIVAL OF THE "JUMNA."—Her Majesty's screw troop-relief steamship Jumna, Captain Richards, arrived on Dec. 19 at Portsmouth Harbour from Bombay. The deaths on board since leaving Bombay have been only one invalided soldier and three children. The 20th Hussars were sent by railway to Colchester, the D Battery of Royal Horse Artillery to Exeter, and the garrison artillery to Woolwich. The invalided soldiers were sent by ambulance railway cars to the Royal Victoria Military Hospital at Netley.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £650,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 18th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £315,700; to Bombay, £220,000; and to Madras, £114,300. The minimum price was fixed, as before, at 1s. 10½d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 10½d. will receive about 14 per cent., and on Bombay at that price about 24 per cent. Above on all the Presidencies in full. The average rate on Calcutta and Bombay was 1s. 10-65d., and on Madras 1s. 10-68d.

THE NETHERLANDS CUSTOMS TARIFF FOR THE EAST INDIES.—We are informed that by the new Indian Tariff which has lately passed the States General of Holland, and which will come into operation on the 1st of January, 1874, changes are made which will favourably affect British industry and commerce. Differential duties are abolished, and the scale of duties on imports is reduced. Silk, cotton, linens, ribbons, &c., of British manufacture, which now pay a duty of 20 per cent., will, after the 1st of January, 1874, pay only 6 per cent.; and similar advantages will be extended to other British exports.

SIND, PUNJAB, AND DELHI RAILWAY.—The report of the Sind, Punjab, and Delhi Railway Company, to be submitted to the meeting on December 23, states that the net revenue for the half-year ending June last amounted to £59,850, or 22-44 per cent. of the receipts, against £24,571, or 10-52 per cent. at the corresponding period of 1871. The working expenses have been high, owing chiefly to the floods on the Punjab and Delhi section of the line. It is added that the loss which the company had sustained in the death of Sir Donald M'Leod, the deputy chairman, cannot be repaired.

A VICEREGAL DESERT SERVICE.—We have had an opportunity of inspecting an elegant and artistic work in Art-pottery last week, on exhibition at Messrs. Pellatt and Wood's show-rooms, Baker-street. The collection consists of a rich and costly desert service, large enough to accommodate eighty persons at table, every article of crockery, &c., painted with the Order of the Star of India, and designed and manufactured by Messrs. Pellatt and Wood for Lord Northbrook, Governor-General of India. The exquisite workmanship and splendid emblazonry of this collection entitles it to range in Art with the paintings on pottery of Coleman, Minton, or Ludovici.

INDIA-OFFICE AUTHORS.—We notice with satisfaction that the younger members of the Home Establishment are anxious to win their spurs in the field of letters, in which their elder colleagues, Sir John Kaye, Messrs. William Thornton, Herman Merivale, Juliaud Danvers, Clements Markham, &c., have already earned fame, and in which the Messrs. James and John Stuart Mill, Peacock, Chas. Lamb, and others of the old Company's worthies were renowned. Mr. F. C. Danvers, Associate Institution C.E., of the Public Works Department, has published a work on coal economy, and M. J. M. Wigner, B.A., of the Store Department, has issued a treatise on telegraphy. We learn that the last addition to the permanent Home Establishment will shortly have a book in the press.

INDIAN CIVIL ENGINEERING COLLEGE.—A competitive examination, it is announced, will be held in July next, for the selection of fifty candidates for admission to the Indian Civil Engineering College, Cooper's-hill, Surrey. For further particulars we refer to the official notice in our advertising columns.

THE ACCIDENT TO SIR DONALD McLEOD.—Pursuant to the notice given by Captain Tyler at the inquiry on Friday week concerning the death of Sir Donald McLeod, on the Metropolitan District Railway, an official inspection was on Friday last made by that gentleman of the whole of the stations between Broad-street and the Mansion House, with a view to ascertain how far it would be possible to improve the footpaths of the carriages with reference to the construction of the various platforms. Captain Tyler was accompanied by Mr. Cumberland, the legal assessor appointed by the Board of Trade to assist in the inquiry, and by the principal officers of the Great Western, the London and North-Western, the Metropolitan, and the Metropolitan District Railway Companies. Among those present were Mr. Grierson, Mr. Neale, Mr. Mansell, Mr. Broyles, Mr. Woodhouse, Mr. Denne, Mr. Matthews, and Mr. Tomlinson, and there were also present Colonel Pollock and Mr. Henry Pollock, friends of the late Sir Donald McLeod.

A JOB.—The Bombay Press is loud in its censure of an appointment just made by the Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, by which Sir Augustus Spencer's nephew, a young officer with no qualifications other than his relationship to the military chief of the Presidency, becomes a brigade-major on the establishment, to the detriment of numerous deserving officers, both of the British and Indian forces. Our views on the subject of Indian Staff selections we expressed so recently that it is scarcely necessary to pass comment on this last breach of faith. Suffice it to say, we consider Sir Augustus Spencer's act an exceedingly foolish one. Whatever be the position a man may hold, it is always desirable he should possess the confidence of those serving about him. This confidence General Spencer, in making this last selection, at once forfeits. But we trust he may see his error now that it has been pointed out to him, and make search for a more fitting man. It is evident he will not have to look long.—Army and Navy Gazette.

BOMBAY, BARODA, AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.—The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on Friday at the London Tavern; Lieutenant-Colonel P. T. French, the chairman, presided. The report was taken as read. The chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, congratulated the proprietors on the improved position of their affairs. Not only did the line pay for the first time the full guaranteed interest, but a small amount beyond it, so that the dividend would be received, as it were, free of income-tax. Before two more half-years were over the state of the company would be that they would always be able to pay the Government guaranteed interest and something more. Mr. Hartridge seconded the resolution for the adoption of the report, which was agreed to without discussion. Resolutions were passed, authorising the distribution for the past half-year of a dividend at the rate of 1s. 8d. per cent. per annum on the paid-up stock and share capital, and authorising all the "H" and extension shares of the company fully paid up on the 31st inst. to be converted into capital stock of the company.

THE SUEZ CANAL.—The Times Malta correspondent writes under date of December 13:—The following mercantile steamers have called here to coal:—The Odesa, 819 tons, on the 8th inst., forty days from Penang, and fourteen from Jedda, with a general cargo, for London; the Dhoolia, 1,726 tons, on the 9th, twenty days from London, and nine from Spithead, with a general cargo, for Madras and Calcutta; the Craigforth, 862 tons, on the 11th, twelve days from London, and nine from Plymouth, with a general cargo, for China; the Excelsior, 898 tons, on the 12th, twenty days from Calcutta, and nine from Port Said, with a general cargo, for London; the Malaga, 622 tons, on the same day, eleven days from Liverpool, with a general cargo, for Bombay; the Creighton, 308 tons, also on the 12th, twenty-one days, from Newcastle, with coal, for Aden; the Serapis, Indian troopship, on the 11th inst., nineteen days from Bombay, with troops, for Portsmouth. The following have passed in sight of this island:—The Timoir, on the 10th, from Newcastle, for Suez; the Hutton, on the evening of the following day, thirteen days from Cardiff, for Aden, all well on board.

ASSOCIATION IN AID OF SOCIAL PROGRESS IN INDIA.—On Friday evening, at 1, Adam-street, Adelphi, under the presidency of Hodgson Pratt, Esq., an admirable lecture was delivered by I. T. Prichard, Esq., followed by an interesting discussion in which several Indian and Anglo-Indian gentlemen took part. The audience was not large but intelligent; several ladies being present. The subject of language as the medium of conveying European ideas and feelings to the mind of India came to the front, and several valuable remarks were made on the comparative value of English or one of the vernacular tongues for the purpose of education, and for rearing up a class of men for the administrative service of the Government. The importance, and even necessity, for all natives holding high office of completing their preparation for it in this country was unanimously conceded by all the speakers, but the injustice of the present competitive system, especially in limiting the age of candidates to twenty-one, was forcibly pleaded, and the preferable plan of conducting the examination in India before the visit to England was recommended. The important aid which such an Association as that before which the lecture was delivered in bringing English and Indians together can render, by promoting a better mutual knowledge of both countries and people, is apparent from such meetings, and deserves more active encouragement.

LEGAL EDUCATION.—A scheme, it may be remembered, for the education of students for the Bar, or for practice under the Bar, and for their examination, was issued last summer by the Council of Legal Education. At a meeting of the Council of Legal Education at the Council Chamber, Lincoln's-inn, on the 10th of December, it was ordered that the following clauses be added to the scheme:—
"1. That having regard to the wishes expressed by the two societies of the Temple, a professor be appointed for one year from the 1st of January, 1873, to continue the lectures and classes on Hindu and Mahomedan law and the laws in force in British India on the same terms as at present, with power to the Council from time to time to continue the professorship for a longer period on such terms as they shall think fit. 2. That all students who have entered, before the 1st of January, 1873, shall be entitled to compete for the studentships mentioned in Rule 32, provided they shall not have kept more than eleven terms at the time of examination. 3. That Rule 32 shall not come into operation until the 1st of January, 1874, and that the examination for honours, held pursuant to Rule 30, shall be held before Trinity and Michaelmas Terms in the year 1873, instead of before Hilary and Trinity Terms, and that Studentships and Exhibitions of the same amounts, and tenable for the same periods as provided by Rule 47 of the Consolidated Regulations of 1869, shall be conferred as provided by such rules."

OUDE AND ROHILKUND RAILWAY.—The twentieth ordinary general meeting of the Oude and Rohilkund Company (Limited) was held on Dec. 18, at the City Terminus Hotel. Mr. William Dent, chairman of the board, presiding. The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said he was happy to inform the proprietors that everything was going as satisfactorily as they could wish. There was no doubt of their paying five per cent. on the cost of construction, so that anything beyond would give them an additional return. The company had a regular supply of fuel at Byramghat. General Beadle, the company's agent, stated he could speak in the highest terms of the heads of departments, and they in turn praised their officers, and they all felt much interest in the undertakings of the company. They were therefore most fortunate in the choice of their officials. Mr. M. Gladstone, a director, seconded the resolution for the adoption of the report. Mr. Franklin said he had made a calculation that by means of the present traffic on the lines opened more than five per cent. would be earned. In reply to a question, it was stated that 295 miles were now open, and that 411 miles more would be opened early next year, making altogether 706 miles. The Government would find any capital that might be required beyond the capital of £4,000,000 at present authorised. Where the cost of the large bridges was added, the average cost would be about £9,509 per mile of standard gauge—5½ feet. The report was then unanimously adopted.

INDIAN APPEAL.—GRIJA KANT LAHORY V. HURRISH CHUNDER CHOWDRY.—JUDGMENT.—Their Lordships in giving judgment expressed a hope that the litigation, which in the present suit was commenced in the year 1859, would now be terminated. Mr. Leith, Q.C., Mr. Cowie, and Mr. Mazumdar were for the appellant; Mr. Field, Q.C., and Mr. Doyne for the respondent. The litigation was in respect of a considerable tract of alluvial land. In 1852 there was a decree as to some land in which the parties were concerned, and in 1859 the appellant alleged that the respondent had possessed himself of a portion of his land, and the respondent alleged that he had been in possession of it before the decree. The Principal Sudder Ameen found in favour of the appellant, which decision the High Court of Calcutta reversed, and the case came before their Lordships. The judgment of the Principal Sudder Ameen was given on the 18th July, 1864, and the decree of the High Court made on the 4th Dec., 1865. Sir Montagu Smith, in giving the judgment of the committee, traced the origin of the litigation, and dissected the evidence given. There were considerable difficulties in the case, and their lordships could not rely on the maps which had been produced in support of the appellant's case. There had been long litigation, which it was to be hoped would now cease, and establish the title to the land in question. It was for the appellant to prove his case, and as it was opened by Mr. Leith it seemed simple enough, but the evidence given on the part of the respondent was much stronger than that given by the appellant, and showed that it was not the identical land which was decreed in 1852. His lordship reviewed the evidence given on both sides, with the description of the land given. There was much difficulty as to the landmarks and its position on the maps. Their lordships did not concur in all the reasons given by the High Court. In their opinion the respondent had established his title, and they would humbly advise her Majesty that the judgment of the High Court be affirmed, with costs. The appeal will accordingly be dismissed.

BETTS AND OTHERS v. ARBUTHNOT AND CO.—This case, which has just been decided, is noteworthy from the comparative rapidity with which the proceedings have progressed. The original plaint was filed on the 5th of February, 1869, and the decree of the Court of First Instance made on the 31st of December following. The appeal to the High Court was filed on the 26th of March, 1870. The petition of appeal to her Majesty was dated the 22nd of December, and the appeal heard and decided within two years. Formerly cases were pending for a number of years. The appeal was from a decision of the Calcutta High Court, dated the 26th of July, 1870, by which the decree of the judge of the Lower Court of the 31st of December, 1869, was reversed, and the claim of the respondents (the plaintiffs below) decreed in full. The principal question of fact in the suit was as to whether the appellants were justified in refusing to take the delivery of and pay for a quantity of indigo seed on the ground of its being of a quality inferior to that which they had ordered. A question of law was also raised as to whether the plaintiffs, who had by their plaints sued expressly as vendors of the seed, and had deposed in the suit that they were not vendors, but agents, could in a suit so framed recover as agents. The judge of the Court of the First Instance held it to be at variance, and dismissed the suit. The High Court, admitting the variance, held it was not fatal, and gave the respondents a decree for the original cost of the seed, with commission and expenses. Messrs. Arbuthnot are merchants and agents at Madras, and sued Mr. Betts and his partners, who are indigo-growers in Bengal. Sir Barnes Peacock, in delivering judgment, referred to the circumstances of the case and the decision of the Court below. Three of the judges of the High Court were unanimous in coming to the conclusion that Messrs. Arbuthnot had properly and honestly fulfilled the commission with which they had been entrusted. Their lordships saw no reason to interfere with the judgment of the High Court, and would therefore humbly advise her Majesty that the decision of the Court be affirmed with costs. The appeal was accordingly dismissed.

MADRAS RAILWAY.—The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on Dec. 17, at the London Tavern; Colonel J. T. Smith, R.E., the chairman, presided. The report, an abstract of which has already appeared, was held as read. The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said that at the last meeting he had to call their attention to a proposition for the union of the three companies—the Carnatic, the Great Southern, and the Madras Railway Companies—and after some discussion the proprietors came to the conclusion that it was not to the interest of the Madras Company to unite with the other two companies. There had since been no negotiation on the subject, nothing more had been done, and he presumed there was an end of the matter. Some allusion as to making both their lines more productive had been made so as to pay the guaranteed interest on the capital. His view was a judicious system of branches so as to enable the company to accommodate a wider area of the country with a light and suitable system of permanent way and rolling stock constructed on the present standard gauge, so as in some cases to join neighbouring lines for an interchange of traffic. The Great Southern of India line would be thus enabled to accommodate the traffic south of their line to the extent of 20,000 or more square miles of country. There was a project for running a trunk line from Madras to Trichinopoly and on to Tuticorin, but he thought that this would be rather an injurious line to the company. They were about to lose the valuable services of Mr. Elwin, their agent in India, and they feared, although the salary was liberal, that it would be very difficult to replace him. He had acted throughout to the entire satisfaction of the board and of the Government authorities. They still hoped to have an extension of their line from Beypoor to Calicut and to Cochin. The Chamber of Commerce in Madras had reported in favour of a line from the company's Bellary branch to Gudduck, a cotton district. The length of line was as 90 miles to 180 miles by another proposed route. The Madras central station would be opened to the public in January next. Mr. Arbuthnot, deputy chairman, seconded the resolution for the adoption of the report and statement of accounts. He stated that the traffic was increasing, and he trusted that it would continue to increase. The resolution was carried unanimously.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.—The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on Friday, at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street; Colonel J. Holland in the chair. The report, of which the following is an abstract, was taken as read. The report of the directors states that the receipts on capital account amounted to £23,956,382, including £229,602 premiums on stock and shares not bearing interest, and £22,867,766 expended, including stores on hand, leaving a balance of £1,088,616. The amount of premium on shares deposited with the Government as "capital not bearing interest" was increased in the course of the half-year by £15,125. The gross receipts for traffic amounted to £1,066,638, and the expenditure (including Indian income-tax and amounts charged to special funds) to £607,737, leaving the net profit £458,901. This showed a falling off in the net profit to the extent of £18,972, compared with the corresponding period of 1871. The directors trusted that, now attention had been again forcibly called to the necessity of proper roads leading to the railway-stations, earnest measure would be speedily taken by the Government for their constructions. The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said that in the last half year the receipts for cotton amounted to 35 per cent. of the whole, while the percentage in the corresponding half amounted to 45 per cent. The total decrease under the head of cotton had been £128,348, but that had been made up by other items, so that the total deficiency in the receipts was not much more than £18,000 as compared with the corresponding period. The result of the whole operations was that the net return was equal to £4. 16s. 8d. per cent. on the capital expended; but taking into account the advantage of interest at lower rates on the borrowed capital the net revenue would pay equal to 5 per cent. on the share capital. The decrease in the number of passengers carried during the past half-year was 72,790, which did not arise from raising the fares, but from passengers travelling a greater number of miles than formerly. The report was unanimously adopted, the number of the directors was reduced to eight, and on the motion of Mr. M'Ewen, seconded by Mr. Billings, the remuneration of the directors was increased from £1,000 to £2,000 a year, and the payment of the managing director from £1,200 to £1,500 a year. The difference, £1,300 a year, was to be deducted from the interest on £37,000 capital belonging to the shareholders, as the Government had refused to allow more than £1,000 a year for the Board and £1,200 a year for the managing director.

Spirit of the Home Journals.

THE VICEREGAL PROGRESS.

The Saturday Review observes that Lord Northbrook is far too sensible a man not to realise the true character of his office, and he seems to have taken care that it should be known that the continuity of Indian policy neither can nor will suffer any breach under his Viceroyalty. It is only by keeping in mind that the Viceroy has a limited range of power and freedom, and by attaching the true amount of value and no more to the pageantry which attends his progress, that an accurate conception can be formed of the real extent of that field of usefulness which lies open to him as his stately procession rolls on from one centre of Indian life to another. On one point we notice Lord Northbrook's views with great satisfaction. An Act was passed not long ago permitting the Indian Government to appoint to posts in the Covenanted Civil Service natives not members of that service; and it was provided that the mode and terms of admission of such native to the Civil Service should be in accordance with regulations to be made by the Indian and approved of by the Home Government. Lord Northbrook was reminded of this at Bombay, and a plan was recommended to him by which a certain number of admissions to the Civil Service would be opened to public competition by examinations to be held in India. Lord Northbrook expressed a very decided disagreement with this proposal. He is not very well pleased with the extension of competition into every department of the English public service; but he is overwhelmed with the difficulty, which seems to baffle every English statesman, of knowing what to substitute for it here. In India, the reasons which may be urged in its defence when applied to England are altogether wanting, and, bad as are many of the results of the system in England, they would be a hundredfold worse in India. It is to be deplored that all appointments to the Indian Civil Service are made by competition under the present system. The public servants thus obtained are good but they are not the best that could be obtained. There is a sameness about them; they are all crammed in the same way; they come from much the same class of people, with very few exceptions. If it were possible to think only of how to get the best body of civil servants for India, it would be a great improvement if a portion—half, perhaps, or three-fifths—were appointed by competition, and the remainder by honest nomination. That we cannot think only of what is best for India in this respect is the consequence of our living under Parliamentary government. The pressure on a Minister to do jobs in return for political services and assistance is so strong as to be found irresistible, or, if resisted, is strong enough to destroy the peace and happiness of the Minister. The primary reason why competition has been established in England is not that anyone thinks this the best mode of appointing public servants, but that Ministers have insisted on being relieved at any cost from the nuisance of being perpetually badgered or betrayed into jobs. In India those who have to appoint to high posts are free from any pressure of the sort, and they can choose the best men as freely as they please and as their wits serve them. Perhaps there never was a Government which in making an appointment could look so exclusively to the benefit of the public as the Government of India. Competition, again, which is a very feeble guide to excellence in England, would be no guide at all in India. The clever, verbose, shallow, imitative native, who knows English and can write reams full of answers to any possible paper of questions, is exactly the man who ought to be carefully excluded from access to any office which demands the instinctive perception of the arts of government. To put him to govern millions of his countrymen, and to influence the security and prosperity of vast districts would simply make our rule in India ridiculous. Fortunately no one can be more alive to the absurdity than Lord Northbrook has shown himself to be.

SIMLA IN 1872.—It has been well described as a ridge or backbone with twelve ribs, elevated some 8,000 feet above the sea. The main line—the Mall—is nearly straight for three miles east and west; that is, from Boileaugunge, its western terminus, to its eastward, centering at Burra Simla Bazaar. This ridge road is paralleled on its southern side by the Government cart-road. It also sweeps off two miles to the south-east from the bazaar to Strawberry-hill. The preferred dwellings and best houses of the station thickly stud this Strawberry branch of the Mall, best known as the South Jake-road. Studying with some care in the club reading-room and at the library an excellent topographical map of Simla and its neighbourhood, you see half-a-dozen spurs stretching northwards, and as many running southwards from the Mall. Nothing is easier than to keep in mind these natural side streets or "closes," for they halt after a stretch of two or three miles, with an almost abrupt descent on all sides into very deep valleys, or khuds, one or two thousand feet down, to what appears as a river on the maps. There are, however, so few perennial springs, and the water-lines of the khuis and valleys descend so sharply into other chasms, that, in a brief period after "the rains," all the water runs off. This rapid escape of the waters, let me say, is most damaging to hopes of colonisation hereabout by European emigrants. I am aware of the importance of this statement, in view of the lately revived efforts to plant an English colony in the Himalayas, and should not make the affirmation except on a basis of facts which are irrefragable. Year by year, on present arrangements, there begins to be a dearth of water in Simla within a month from the closing of the rains. Nor does it answer—the thing has been tried—to detain the water in reservoirs, where "it soon becomes unfit to drink." At this very time natives have to wait at the "bowlies," or fountains—the few that continue to run—from half an hour to an hour to get a ghurraful of water. And should Simla continue to enlarge its population, the difficulty could only be met by the doubtful experiment of damming up the Combermere gorge at a most inconvenient distance down, perhaps two or three miles below "The Bridge," the chief point of supply, at which it now trickles so feebly from under Jako through three small wooden spouts. Kussowlie, the porch of Simla, or its lodge or doorway, is even worse off for water than Simla itself. A large number of men and mules are incessantly on the move, like migrating ants, to and from the barracks, down and up from "the spring."—Indian Daily News Correspondent.

Copy of a Letter from Lieut.-Col. Oliver, formerly Commanding 21st Regt. N.I.

Bareilly, December 19, 1837.

SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th inst., calling on me for a Testimonial of conduct while serving under my command in the 21st Regt. N.I., from 1827 to 1831. In complying with your request, I have great pleasure in stating that, during the whole of that period, I found you unremitting in zeal and attention to your professional duties as a Staff Officer, and in command or charge of a Company, and that as an Interpreter I have seldom known your equal.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant.

T. S. OLIVER, Lieut. Col.,
Commanding 8th Regt. N.I.,
Late of the 21st Regt. N.I.

To Lieut. Besant, Interpreter and Qr. Master,
21st Regt. N.I.

Copy of a Letter from Lieut.-Col. Palmer, Commanding 21st Regt. N.I.

SIR,—In consequence of your having informed me that you conceive your interests may be advanced by the expression of my opinion of your abilities as an Interpreter, I cannot, in justice to your qualifications as a Linguist, refrain from stating that I entertain a very high opinion of your requirements, and that I conceive them of so superior a grade, as to enable you to discharge with credit the duties of any situation requiring a perfect knowledge of the Hindoostanee language. I have the pleasure to add that, during the period I have commanded the 21st Regiment N.I., since August, 1835, you have performed the duties of your situation much to my satisfaction.—I have the honour to be, &c.,

T. PALMER, Lieut.-Col.,
Commanding 21st Regt. N.I.

To Lieut. Besant, Interpreter and Qr. Master,
21st Regt. N.I.

Copy of a Letter from Colonel Skinner, C.B., Commanding at Hamsie.

Hamsie, December 29, 1857.

SIR,—In reply to your communication of the 10th instant, requiring a Testimonial of conduct, I have much pleasure in stating that during the time you were under my command, you evinced great zeal and ability in the discharge of your duties as Station Staff, and the manner in which you conducted the epistolary correspondence, in Persian, connected with the troops of her Highness the late Begum Sumroo, then stationed in Hurreannah, was highly creditable to you, and afforded me the most entire satisfaction.

I have also much pleasure in adding that, in conversing with the Natives you displayed a very superior knowledge of the Hindoostanee language, and that I have rarely met an officer of your standing in the service possessing so great a knowledge of the native character as yourself. Before concluding, I think it but justice to you to certify that I conceive your requirements as a Linguist to be such, as to enable you to perform, with facility and credit, the duties of any situation wherein a knowledge of the Oriental languages is necessary, and it will be highly gratifying to me to hear of your exertions having been rewarded.—I have the honour, &c.,

J. SKINNER, Colonel,
Commanding at Hamsie.

W. G. OSBORNE, M.S.G.G.

To Lieut. Besant.

Extract from the Englishman Newspaper, published in Calcutta, December 18, 1838.

Letters from Mountain state that Major Parsons had been misinformed respecting the resources of that place. To remedy the difficulty, Lieut. Besant, the Interpreter and Quarter-master of the 21st N.I., who has attracted the notice of Government by his great success in the acquisition of languages, was yesterday appointed to the Commissariat, and despatched to Mittenkote, escorted by eighty of the Maharajah's sowars, &c.

I have had the pleasure of knowing Major T. H. G. Besant, Retired List Indian Army, for thirty-seven years. He was Interpreter of the Native Regiment, to which we both belonged, in India, for several years, and was well known and esteemed as an excellent Persian, Urdu, and Hindi scholar. He spoke Hindustanee with such perfect idiom and pronunciation, that in Asiatic costume he has passed for a Native, with Natives as well as Europeans. In consequence of his superior knowledge of the languages, he was selected in 1838 to officiate in the Commissariat Department in the Kabul war. J. CHAMBERS, Lieut.-col., M.A., University Teacher of Hindustanee.

Oxford, August 18, 1872.

"This is one of an exceedingly useful class of books. When we remember the number of histories of India which have appeared within the last century, have had their little day, been thrown aside, then forgotten, we should acknowledge with becoming gratitude any writer who could combine some- thing of the accurate research of Gibbon with a dash of the brilliancy of Macaulay, and thus make the public better acquainted with that portion of the British Empire than, judging from what goes on in Parliament during an Indian debate, they at present are."—School Board Chronicle.

administration of this country, and especially that the policy which is to be pursued toward them is finally and firmly fixed, so that they can rely upon the British Government treating them with confidence, with cordiality, and with sympathy."

SIR PHILIP WODEHOUSE for his part trusted that the meeting at Barwai was not the last occurrence of that kind which might take place during his term of office. He would gladly believe that "we have entered upon the age of reunions of this sort," reunions which seemed to have been foreshadowed by the dinner party at Sir H. Rawlinson's, when he himself, Lord Hobart, and the present Viceroy were "all sitting together side by side, after the ladies had left the table," only a few days before Lord Northbrook's departure. Holkar, like a good Hindu, did not share in the feast itself, but came in after dinner and sat down, behind the Viceroy and beside his new Dewán, Sir Mádhava Rao. His gratification at the manner in which his health was toasted expressed itself not in a set speech, but in any number of polite salaams to the assembled company.

HIS HIGHNESS seems to have been equally gratified and less silent at the previous ceremony of laying the first stone of the Narbadda Bridge. When the stone had been duly laid, and the result announced by a royal salute, three cheers were given by the party with a heartiness which affected Holkar himself. Turning with a bright smile to the Viceroy, he said, "Your Excellency, this work will be a welcome to her Majesty as well as her Viceroy."

MAHARAJAH SINDHIA returned to his capital on the 28th November, and was preparing by latest accounts to assemble his troops in a camp of exercise at Autri. He too is said to have been highly pleased with the result of his interview with Lord Northbrook at Bombay. Not only has his Highness got leave to adopt another heir in the stead of him who has lately been deposed for plotting against the Maharajah; but if all reports be true, he has persuaded the Viceroy to gratify his love of military display by rescinding the rule which forbade him from massing all his troops in one great encampment. The dearest wish of his heart however, as the Friend of India terms his desire to recover for himself the rock-fortress of Gwalior, is one which Lord Northbrook will do well to leave ungratified. Sindhia himself may be a very loyal ally, but can we trust his army or his successors, or even an untoward change in the present circumstances?

THE Rajah of Patiala has offered a scholarship of Rs. 2,000 a-year besides Rs. 3,000 for passage-money, to any selected candidate from the Punjab who may wish to compete for the Civil Service Examination in England. The fund set apart for this purpose will enable one student to visit England every three years. Preference will be given, we observe, to students of good birth.

A LARGE native meeting held at Calcutta has voted an address to Mr. Fawcett in gratitude for his services on the Indian Finance Committee. At the same meeting the electors of Brighton were thanked for their disinterested conduct in sending to Parliament a member for India in the person of Mr. Fawcett.

THE coming events of next year's Indian policy are already casting long shadows before them, if recent telegrams from Calcutta may be deemed trustworthy. From one of these it

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, December 9; Agra and Madras, December 7; Calcutta, December 6.

FROM Nagpúr, in the Central Provinces, the Viceroy started on the 1st December for Barwai, the appointed meeting-place of himself and Maharajah Holkar. Here on the 3rd his Lordship held a grand Darbar, at which some eighty native Chiefs were duly presented to him, amidst the pomp and pageantry of which their class is always fond. After the Darbar Lord Northbrook proceeded, in company with Holkar, to lay the first stone of the great Narbadda Bridge, the most important work on the Indore State Railway. This bridge will be 2,780 feet long and 110 feet high, so that the Narbadda in flood time may always find its way through the broad arches. It will be fortunate in having solid foundations—an advantage not always securable in India. The day's proceedings ended with a grand banquet, given by Holkar to his Viceroyal guest. The great speech at the banquet seems to have been that of Sir Madhava Rao, who discoursed eloquently of "the vast iron zigzag," which enables the Viceroy to "visit, vivify, and invigorate, with ease an expedition, equally the heart and extremities of what would otherwise have been an unwieldy empire." The work that day begun he described as "the foundation of a more intimate, a more affectionate connection between paramount and protected sovereignties. . . . Bound to the fortunes of British India by ties of iron, the peace, the happiness, and the stability of her Majesty's Asiatic Empire will more than ever be the peace, the happiness, and the stability of the Native Principalities." The Viceroy, whom one correspondent describes as a painful speaker, whose thoughts "seem to come limply as well as reluctantly," managed however, not only to compliment his Agent, General Daly, and to praise Holkar for taking a lively interest in the progress of the Indore Railway, but to express a politic hope that the courtesies everywhere shown him were "not simply formal tokens of allegiance to the British Crown, but are founded upon a deeper feeling—a feeling that these princes and chiefs now understand fully the principles of the British appears that Lord Northbrook will probably abolish the Income-tax and the Export Duty on Indian Wheat, and that he may "possibly" put an end to the Trade Tax in the Central Provinces. We only hope that the author of the telegram will prove a true prophet with regard to the first-named impost. There may be something to say for retaining the export duty on wheat in a country which must largely depend on itself for the due supply of that necessary article; but there is absolutely nothing to say for an income-tax which yields no profit worth setting for a moment against the evils involved in its collection. Another piece of news brought by the same telegram might seem at first glance to imply a contradiction of the previous statement. Sir R. Temple, we are told, is "likely to remain another year"—in his present post, we presume; and no one has seemed to be so enamoured of the income-tax as Sir R. Temple himself. But perhaps the prospect of a handsome surplus for this year will assuage the sorrow he might otherwise feel at having to part with the particular impost in defence of which he has lost so much of his former popularity; and a year of office without an income-tax may enable him to leave the scene of his recent labours with more satisfaction both to himself and the Indian public at large.

FROM the same source we learn that the Indian Government contemplate the reduction and reorganisation of the Madras and Bombay Armies. Had the announcement been put forth a little less nakedly, we might know what to say about it. As it is, we cannot tell whether it refers to the Native Armies alone, or to the whole system administered by the Commanders-in-Chief of Bombay and Madras. That some reduction in the Madras Native Army has long been talked of, we know, and the need of reorganising the Native Armies not only in those two Presidencies, but in Bengal also has long been widely felt. The present system of officering these armies on the "irregular" principle, which answered so well under different conditions, has certainly proved a regular mistake; and it is high time to attempt the reforming of it; not perhaps by increasing the number of English officers, but rather by employing native officers of the old "irregular" type, young men of rank and substance fit to command soldiers in the field, instead of old sepoys promoted from the ranks. We should have thought too that the Bombay Army was already reduced enough; and the proposed reduction of the Madras Army has so often been denounced as both unjust and inexpedient, that the Viceroy will do well to think twice before he commits himself to a measure which would seriously weaken the only reserve army we have in India. His Lordship has already learned the advantage of seeing things with his own eyes, and discussing local questions on the spot. Cannot he manage to run over to Madras in company with Lord Napier, but not with Major-General Norman? He might learn something at any rate from a visit to the least troublesome and most neglected of Indian Presidencies.

IN his answer to the Madras memorial praying for a definition of the term "Natives of India," as employed in a former despatch from the India Office, the Duke of Argyll defines the term in accordance with the Act of 1870, which includes among "Natives of India" anyone "born and domiciled within the dominions of her Majesty in India, of parents habitually resident in India, and not established there for temporary purposes only." All who come under this definition may take comfort from his Grace's avowed desire to secure to natives of India increased employment in the service of the Government. But the poor "uncovenanted" Europeans are not so fortunate. His Grace, in the clearest terms, desires that it may be regarded "as a general principle, not hereafter to be departed from," that Europeans appointed in India to offices shall receive "no greater advantages of any kind, furlough of course included, than would be enjoyed by natives holding such posts or offices." This may look like equal measure to all; but we fail to see the justice of a principle which allows an Englishman in the uncovenanted service exactly the same amount of furlough and no more than his native comrade, whose home can never at the outside be more than a few hundred miles away from his office-room. If a householder in London has a number of servants, most of whom come from the neighbourhood, while one or two have their homes in Scotland, would he think it fair to enforce upon these latter the same rules regarding leave of absence which might answer well enough with their fellow-servants, who can reach their homes in half-an-hour? Would not the "one afternoon in the week out," which might satisfy the one, prove a mournful mockery to the other?

A Times telegram of December 26 from Berlin seems to confirm the truth of the latest reports from India regarding the Russian reverses in the Khánat of Khiva. Not only have the Khivans driven back the Russian column sent out from the Caspian, but they have even carried their arms into Russian territory. Nine thousand of them are described as besieging the Russian forts of Old and New Amba. Two thousand more are said to be raiding along the lower course of the Amba River, while other troops are marching to attack the Russian posts of Krasnovodsk on the Caspian, and Fort Irghis on the road from Orenburg to Turkistan. All this looks as if the men of Khiva were receiving strong support from their Turki neighbours in the Steppes of Central Asia. Meanwhile Russian reinforcements have been sent with all speed from Orenburg and Irghis to the Amba Forts. Altogether Russia is likely to have her hands full of work, before a sufficient force shall have been collected next spring for the intended conquest of Khiva.

FROM the same telegram we learn that "according to rumours current at St. Petersburg," Lord Augustus Loftus has formally acquainted Prince Gortshakoff with the resolution of the English Government to refrain from interfering with Russian progress along the Oxus and the Jaxartes, provided that no movement is made against Afghanistan or the principalities on the Upper Oxus, or on any country between Khiva and Afghanistan over which the Amír of the latter kingdom claims sovereignty. This important piece of news, if it were only true, would stop the mouths of those restless politicians who see a new danger to India in every movement of Russian troops against the Turki Khanats or the Tartars of the Steppes. It would show at any rate that England had a definite policy which Russia could only attempt to thwart at her peril; and it would satisfy those who seek to draw a distinct line between the protected States on our North-Western frontier and the country which Russia may annex or overawe at her pleasure. An arrangement of this sort would at least give Russia due warning of the danger involved in any rash advance towards Balkh and Herat, if she has ever meditated such an advance. Unluckily however a later telegram denies the truth of the statement above quoted, and the croakers who believe in the Russian Bogie may still continue to bewail the blindness of their lighter-hearted neighbours.

To the admiring spectator of the Viceroy's public appearances in Bombay, everything doubtless seemed to have gone off in the most successful manner. Lord Northbrook himself performed his part in the show with all the courtesy and tact of his high position. But the spirit of red-tape was not altogether wanting at such a time. If we are to believe the statement of an Indian journal, some official wisacre at the last moment issued an order forbidding the retainers of the native chiefs to wear red uniform, because the Viceroy's followers were clothed in red. The consequence was that a good deal of livery of the forbidden colour, which the Rajahs and Nawábs had prepared for their followers at no small expense had to be laid aside at short notice, and replaced by any old finery which their boxes or the neighbouring shops might furnish. "How beautifully," remarks the Indian Mirror, "do our authorities know how to please and conciliate our feudatories!" But red-tape is inexorable as Pluto himself, and what matters a little annoyance to a few proud nobles in comparison with the sacred claims of etiquette? We would at least suggest that on the next occasion our native feudatories should be warned a little sooner against similar breaches of ceremonial propriety.

THE threat of compulsory removal from the service, which was uttered some months ago from Westminster, is already being enforced against certain officers of the Indian army. It appears that several of these unfortunates who are now at home will at once be called upon to apply, before the 1st March next, for leave to retire from a service for which they have been pronounced no longer fit by the local authorities. Every officer entitled to full-pay will receive the next higher pension to that of his actual standing, in consideration of his previous services. To a captain who would otherwise receive no more than the half-pay of his rank, a special pension of £160 a year will be awarded. If any of the officers concerned should fail to apply in time for the proffered boon, his hesitation to take the good the Gods provide him will be out short at the proper moment by his compulsory removal to the retired list. That such an arrangement will entirely satisfy those for whom it is designed, we dare not undertake to predict: the world is so full of unreasonable people who put their own value on the services they may have rendered the State. We can only hope that they will not grumble overmuch at the blessing in disguise which their masters have so kindly prepared for them, but will learn to see the beauty of sacrificing themselves for the good of the Indian taxpayer.

THE Englishman has some sensible arguments in defence of the new official or scientific system of spelling Indian names. The system itself is as old as Sir W. Jones, but it has only now received official sanction. Its great merit consists in the rendering of every Hindustani vowel and consonant by its nearest equivalent in some European language. A writer in the Calcutta Review complains of this system as introducing endless confusion in the spelling of Indian names. But the confusion we already have from the utter want of system which has hitherto prevailed, a confusion aggravated by the marvellous irregularity of our own language in respect of pronunciation. When the new system shall have once established itself, there ought to be no confusion. As the Englishman points out, "we are to use for Indian words the Indian pronunciation of vowels, instead of the English." In short we are to transcribe Indian words in the Roman character, and for that end uniformity is essential. If the uneducated reader will make a hash of Mianmir or Jabalpur, he already makes a hash of Oude, Cabul, Oodeypore, Jeypore, and so on, pronouncing them as Ood, Cabool, Oodipore, Jaypore; just as he blunders over Fraulein, ennui, distingué, Badajoz, and other foreign words. We have heard gentlemen talk of "Dehli" and the "Sikhs," as if these words were pronounced Delhei and Sykes. But any uniform system, be it that of Jones or Gilchrist, or any other, would equally mislead the uneducated reader, neither more nor less than the present haphazard system already does. Any educated reader on the other hand would be at no loss to pronounce correctly such words as Ambála, Audh, Jaipur, Mozafarnagar, &c.

OFFICIAL TOUR.—The following observations of the Pioneer convey no exaggerated picture of the oppression exercised on the villagers by the servants and chuprassies of officials on tour:—"There is, we fear much injustice occasioned to the poor of this country at this season of the year through their being in many instances not paid for provisions supplied in the camps of officers travelling about. It is undoubtedly difficult in India to secure payments being rightly distributed; we know that in the particular cases to which we now refer a small amount of personal attention by each individual officer has a most salutary effect. Domestic servants are, we are convinced, the chief offenders in the matter; the sahib's purchases are as a rule paid for; but his servants, unless looked after, consider themselves privileged to leave at what they call the public expense, but at what really is the expense of that part of the community which can least afford to bear it. Even in cases where the expense consequent on an official visit is borne in the first instance by the landholder, he takes care to relieve his mind of any scruple of generosity by apportioning the amount under the head of "village expenses" among his poorer neighbours. The remedy is, occasional inquiry as to whether what is brought for sale at an encampment has been paid for or not, and punishment of the offender where non-payment is proved. An official who, either from not personally interesting himself or from refusing to listen to complaints, does not do his best to check the oppression is, in our opinion, more to blame than the servants who oppress in his name.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

NATIVES IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

IN the paper which Mr. Prichard read the other day before the Association in Aid of Social Progress in India, he discussed among other things the important question of opening the Indian Civil Service to the natives in the sense lately indicated by the Bombay Association. The question indeed is one which every day brings into greater prominence; and any one who has aught new or suggestive to say on the subject deserves a respectful hearing from all who are interested in India's welfare. In theory of course the free admission of native Indians to the public service of their own country has been for some time an accepted principle of our rule. We are accustomed in public places to boast of the extent to which that principle has already been carried out; and the presence of two or three Indian names in recent lists of successful candidates for civil employ, and of a single native judge on the bench of the Calcutta High Court has often been quoted in proof of our readiness to give native talent free play in every possible direction. The local governments have also been empowered to employ natives in the higher ranks of the Civil Service without subjecting them to a regular examination in England. But all this notwithstanding, it cannot be said that we have gone very far in applying the principle we are so ready to proclaim. The admission of a few natives to high office has somehow failed to satisfy the hopes which their countrymen founded on our frequent professions of sympathy with native yearnings. They have little faith—strange as some may think it—in the practical fruits of a change which leaves them pretty much as they were before. They complain in fact that we offer them with one hand what we take away with the other. In practice no native need aspire to high office who cannot pass a competitive examination in this country, however qualified he may be by birth, talents, and training, to rise in the service of his own Presidency or province. If he can get a certain number of marks in a stiff competition with a crowd of English youths, he may hope in due time to distinguish himself as a Commissioner or a Judge. But, in order to secure that opening, he must come to England—a condition which implies the spending of much money, and in many cases the far more serious loss of caste. Few natives therefore have the means or the courage to attempt a rivalry with the young men of England in a field where the latter have everything in their favour from the first; and those who do attempt it are not always of the class best suited for that particular field. Mr. Prichard therefore hits the right nail on the head when he talks of the natives of India as fully impressed with the belief that competition for the Civil Service, under existing conditions, means virtual exclusion for themselves from that service.

It certainly means an unfair handicapping of the natives in a race where they ought to start on something like equal terms with their English rivals. It would not of course be desirable to let too many natives of India into a field hitherto reserved for men of the ruling race. Some kind of restriction must still for obvious reasons be placed on the number of posts thrown open to all competitors dark or white. No sane person would think of apportioning these posts to either race according to its relative numbers. It is England's business to govern the empire she has won in the East. But it must strike any impartial observer as a positive hardship, that young men born and bred in India should find a way into the higher civil service of their own country only through the strait and narrow gate of public competition in England. Such an arrangement clearly places the native Indian at a two-fold disadvantage as compared with his English rival. If open competition be the one needful test of fitness, why should the examinations be held in London alone? It would be quite practicable, and far more just, to hold like examinations at the great Indian Presidency towns. But, argues Mr. Prichard, it is "very doubtful how far the natives could qualify themselves for office without shaking themselves free from the prejudices, traditions, and associations inseparable from an exclusively Indian education." Perhaps it is, but what then? Would the completion of their education in this country make up for the injustice of hampering them in their reasonable efforts to win honourable employment in their own? Are there no Englishmen or English-teaching schools and colleges in India? Is it our first business to turn natives into sham Englishmen before we entrust them with any important office in the State? Were Sir Madhava Rao and Sir Salar Jang educated in England? To us all arguments of this sort appear to be so many hollow excuses for retaining the monopoly of Indian government in the hands of a few hundred privileged Englishmen; and the natives would be blind indeed or preternaturally trustful, if they accepted in good faith the reasons alleged for their continued exclusion from a field of usefulness for which experience shows them to be well fitted, and on which their right to enter has already been conceded both in form and fact.

Mr. Prichard would smooth the way for Indian candidates by establishing in London a college affiliated to the Indian Universities, "with increased facilities and inducements to Indians to resort to Europe for the completion of their education." That might be all very well for a few enterprising Parsees and ambitious Sudras; but while caste reigns and prolonged visits to England cost money, a vast residue of available talent will continue to lie unemployed, or seek other channels of advancement in India itself. Bengali Baboos are well enough in their way, but we do not want to see all India governed by Bengali Baboos. What is really wanted is an honest enforcement of the powers nominally entrusted to the Indian Government for the special appointment of promising natives to civil posts without reference to the ordinary process of open competition. In India at any rate the competitive system, however tolerable at home, must often fail to search out the fittest men for particular offices. There are not a few educated Indian gentlemen who would not perhaps reach in certain respects the standard of a well-crammed Baboo, but whose social breeding and general endowments would recommend them as capable district-officers or efficient heads of State-departments in their own province. Why should such men be driven to employ their energies in administering Native States, when the British-Indian Governments could retain their services for themselves by dispensing in their favour with the laws of strict routine, or by an honest exercise of the powers they already possess? How many Natives should be admitted to the higher offices of State is a question of policy which the rulers of India are bound of course to consider from the English point of view; but our Indian Empire will not break up a whit the sooner, because natives are allowed to play a more prominent part than hitherto in the government of their own country.

THE HINDUSTANI ABROAD.—VII.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In second place—the more I am living here, the more am being impressed at strange way to govern India!

In India one word I am everlasting hearing as Alpha and Omega, in speeches of Governor General, Members of Council, and in orders in Government Gazette. Word is "Economy." At first did not quite understand meaning of word. Now understand. It means "take much as can get and give as little as can manage." This is real No. 1 secret of Anglo-Indian politician. This is reason that squeeze income tax out of natives of India, never mind natives kicking very hard, because always from darkest ages dislike this sort of tax, and inquisition of domestic privacy, same reason that when get from Income-tax money surplus, then invest black man's cash to build magnificent official pile for great Wuzeer and clerks, because never no more now can give back natives money. Then when Sultan of Roum is coming to London, then spend little more income money to give gorgeous entertainment; but forget to give invitation to poor Indian who has to pay.

Because myself am helping with widow's mite to build imposing edifice, one day Mahmoud Shah and I are walking to see. But first order must get. Then delighted with what was beholding. All looked wonderful as Palace of Aladdin,—pillars of beautiful coloured marbles are interspersed, and the interior is gorgeous. As was passing upper galleries many doors are open, and snug and cosy rooms with Persian carpets and luncheons smoking, and gentlemen seated feet on chimney munching, we are seeing. Mahmoud Shah and I are wishing we were clerks to live in this pandemonium of economy.

Just were leaving building when meet English gentleman clerk who recognised. "Come in my room," he was saying, "very glad to see." So we went in, but then he was recollecting that must first go out for minute, so gave me the Times newspaper to read. What was first thing I saw? "Grand meeting at Mansion-house under presidency of Lord Mayor to petition Chancellor of the Exchequer to repeal Income-tax!" Ho! Ho! I was thinking inside me, if repeal income-tax for own countrymen, then must repeal for poor natives. "Sauce for goose is sauce for gander," as you are saying in your vernacular. When clerk returned was telling me that "Old England most heavily taxed. Middle-class can hardly pay his bills. Money is only half proper value, and food risen to fabulous extravagance. Yet all same time Mr. Lowe is spending seventy millions of people's money!" "If complaining like this," I was telling in reply, "what would say if was inhabitant of Hindostan? Here you have thunderer of Printing-house-square, and other powerful organs of press to expose abuse. In India not got. Nothing of sort. Voice of people cannot penetrate. No House of Commons, no House of Lords, and if native Member of Council should dare open mouth to complain of acts of Government, then in a jiffy kick him down stairs! If should speak like Sir C. Dilke or Mr. Herbert, then would be transported in man-of-war to Andaman Island!"

English people very fond of rubbing hands, saying, "India very contented, very prosperous, education rapidly civilising, become daily more attached to English rule;" but, in the name of God and Prophet, how is knowing all this, if native's mouth is tied up and he cannot speak?

If crores of natives under presidency of great Nawab should assemble on Meidaun in India, to protest against income-tax, then soldiers you are sending, and many persons shooting if do not disperse? Then what can do? Can only sulk with grumbling, and wait opportunity to raise the head of rebellion.

Only, if little real ventilation of public opinion you are giving, by means of independent representation of dense masses, then steam blowing off, no danger of bursting! Then the vessel of state goes more safely.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Conway's Boarding-house,

FAIZ ALI KHAN.

UNAUTHENTICATED "RUMOURS."

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow me a little space for the consideration of a subject brought to my notice in the following extract from a paper recently received from India:—

Rumour has it that the Ruler of Cabul and the Ruler of Kashmir are on the most friendly terms. They are constantly interchanging letters, and they exhibit a brotherly interest in all that concerns the military organisation of each other's political system. Little matters of general interest are touched upon in this correspondence, and we have heard that among other such topics the advance of the Russians in Asia has not been overlooked.

It is very charming to see neighbouring sovereigns behaving in so amiable a manner. It is the interchange of such international courtesies that welds nations together, and enables them, at any moment, to turn the sum of their strength in any required direction. In the case in question the arrangement is most politic, for the Maharajah is very rich, and not very strong, while the Ameer is very strong, and not very rich. It is the union of wealth and warlike force, all that is required for successful war, save fortune.

A very pretty union truly among the romantic mountains of the North! Our observation regarding it is watch; and again we say watch.

The "rumour" here alluded to originated in the columns of the paper published at Lahore, and though it would attract some attention there, would not be likely, as a mere rumour, to obtain that consideration it is sure to obtain when brought forward more prominently by a journal of such influence as the Delhi Gazette (now, as formerly, standing high in public estimation for the accuracy and authenticity of its sources of information). In the shape now given it the matter assumes a very different aspect, and I consider it desirable, in the interests of truth, to endeavour to show how altogether improbable it is that there should be any foundation not only for the amplification of the "rumour," but for the "rumour" itself.

Taking a simply common-sense view of the whole imputation, I would ask, in the first place, whether it is at all likely that a ruling Prince in the position of the Maharajah of Kashmir, a Hindoo, under the protection of the British Government, to whom he has, ever since his accession to power, shown himself a loyal feudatory on all occasions, complying with all demands made upon him and his purse (several of them of a most unreasonable character) would commit himself to the carrying on of a correspondence of any kind with the Mahommedan ruler of Afghanistan, with whom, and whose peoples, he has and can have no sympathy whatever? And whether, of all other subjects, such correspondence would be likely to bear on warlike preparations directed, it is implied, though not said, against his suzerain, whose power to crush him, on the appearance of any treacherous design, he knows full well?

And, secondly, supposing, for argument's sake, that the Maharajah were prepared to meet any advances from Kabul, is it at all likely that the Ameer Shere Ali, who also knows full well that his safety and his life depend on the political and material support he receives at the hands of the British Government, would commit himself to an all but certainty of forfeiting that support, by placing himself in a position calculated seriously to imperil the same, and risk all he possesses for a vain phantom, seeing that that all is not worth a farthing rushlight either against domestic or foreign foes, the moment British countenance might be withdrawn?

Here are two cogent reasons for altogether disbelieving the existence of any foundation for the original "rumour." But when we come to the minute details of the alleged correspondence said to be carried on between those two Princes (who have nothing whatever in common with each other, and are too astute, each for special reasons, to hazard their loss of the good will of the British Government), grafted on to the "rumour" by the Delhi Gazette, is it not most reasonable to enquire how the actual contents of the letters, supposed to have passed between Kabul and Jumoo, came to obtain the publicity vouchsafed to them by the Agra Journal?

I should imagine that two persons, bent on the mischief imputed to them, would take the most careful precautions against the contents of their several letters becoming known either to the public or the Government of India, especially as the choice of channels of communication is so limited. Yet with all this care it is most unlikely that all emissaries bearing it would escape the watchful eye of such a man as Mr. Donald McNabb, and I venture to say if he has had any insight into any such correspondence he is not the officer to allow secrets of that kind to ooze into the columns of a newspaper. If the "postmen" have evaded him, and it is not through any official channel that information in support of the "rumour" has been obtained (and in no other way is it possible the thing, if it existed, could become known), then I have no alternative but to express my belief that the Delhi Gazette, otherwise so accurate, has, in this instance, laid itself open to the inference that it has lent too ready an ear to one of the numerous detractors of the Maharajah of Kashmir for a purpose. Such are constantly on the look-out for occasions to accuse him of doing evil of some kind or other, whether it be the murder of Englishmen (I could adduce two notable instances that have however failed so signally that it is not worth while bringing them up again), the oppression of his subjects in all manner of ways, or the letting them die of starvation rather than unlock his supposed hoards of grain or money.

Of all Princes of India, the Maharajah of Kashmir is the one against whom the shafts of malevolence are most persistently aimed; and yet, I will venture to say, that few, if any, of them, are so ready to lend themselves to improve the condition of their people in every respect. It is because there are so many visitors to Kashmir, who consider it all fair to throw dirt at their host, and write, for writing's sake, about matters they do not understand, while the States of other Princes are unvisited and unnoticed except by officials.

As regards the advance of Russia into Asia, said to have attracted the attention of the two "distinguished correspondents," I venture to say that the view of that subject taken by a correspondent of your own, dating from Biarritz, is the most sensible view of it I have seen for a long while. I am entirely of his opinion that the appearance of Russian traders with Russian piece goods in the Peshawar and other bazaars, as avant couriers of more solid movements eastward, is, unless the British Government adopt a very different policy to that now prevailing, a mere matter of time.

All the durbars of all the Viceroy's of India, conducted on the most gorgeous scale, and attended by all the Princes of the land, will not stem the strong under-current of dislike to our rule that has set in during the last few years, fed as it is by taxation of a most unpalatable character, by high-pressure legislation half-a-century in advance of the times, followed up by rules, regulations, and circulars issued by every imaginable authority, in such bewildering rapidity, that the poor unfortunate people do not know whether they may not be doing the right thing by standing on their heads instead of their heels. I add with sorrow that the conduct of the majority of the European army—officers and men, and of the increasing number of railway employés, is not calculated to diminish that dislike. Lord Lawrence was not far wrong in basing a latent dislike to the introduction of railways on his opinion that the introduction of an army of subordinate Europeans of low degree was not calculated to improve the morale of the country.

Can it, therefore, be wondered at that the people should at times dwell on the possibility of a change of rulers? Be that as it may, I venture to pronounce the correspondence between the rulers of Kashmir and Kabul the undoubted offspring of a lively imagination, fanned from smoke to flame by base, designing people, who should be ashamed of their trade.

* * * * *

P.S.—Since writing the above I learn that dire offence was given to the princely visitors in Bombay, on the occasion of the recent Viceregal Durbar, by the issue of an order prohibiting the use of scarlet or red in the dress of their native attendants and servants, although it was well known that many chiefs had attendants thus attired, and there was clearly no time to provide other dresses of any more suitable character.

DEATH OF DR. ELMSLIE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—The ink with which I alluded to the foul accusations of murder, formerly brought against the Maharajah of Kashmeer, and successfully rebutted, was hardly dry when I saw the following paragraph in a Lahore paper recently received:—

Dr. Elmslie was taken ill just on leaving Sreenuggur. The illness was sudden, and no certain cause has been assigned for it, though we have heard whispers of foul play. The illness, &c.

To those accustomed to this style of inuendo this paragraph simply but clearly insinuates that Dr. Elmslie had been poisoned before he left Sreenuggur, and that he died in consequence.

Dr. Elmslie, while in Kashmeer for four successive seasons, enjoyed, on the whole, excellent health. But during his vacation in Great Britain, and while in Edinburgh, he was attacked by a most severe illness, which so completely undermined his constitution that he never after looked or felt the same man.

He returned to India, and friends there remarked on his altered appearance. From Kashmeer he wrote to the very paper that now gives currency to those disgraceful "whispers of foul play" that his health might prevent his continuing his exertions in attending the cholera-stricken population of Sreenuggur, and it is well known to all those who took an interest in this most estimable man, and their number is legion, that he caught cold, the effects of which were increased by his crossing the 8,000 feet high pass between Barramoola and Poonah, probably snow-covered, and that the result was inflammation of the lungs, under which he unfortunately sank at Goojrat, some fourteen days' march from Sreenuggur.

The opportunity was, however, too good to be passed over. Dr. Elmslie might be in possession of matter which the Maharajah, or his Government, would rather not have published, and his Highness is forthwith once more dragged into the light of day as instigating, or conniving, at the death of a third European gentleman!

Were such an atrocious series of accusations brought against any person residing within the limits of British India, he might, and doubtless would, have brought any editor guilty of writing such libels before a competent tribunal, and secured his punishment accordingly. But as the victim of his insinuations cannot seek redress in British Courts, the writer seems to consider himself safe to say that which he must know to be totally unfounded, while adding insult to injury with impunity.—Yours sincerely,

Dec. 26, 1872.

P.S.—I have since noted that other papers (the Times of India especially) consider the insinuation as totally unfounded; but that does not remove the sting of what the Lahore editor too readily committed to paper.

DERA GHAZEE KHAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

"I think with you that Russia is a great danger to Europe. I think so more strongly, because I have had peculiar opportunities of studying the real sources of her power, and because I believe these sources to be permanent, and entirely beyond the reach of foreign attack."

"It appears that during the last five years, Russia, profiting by the Chinese disturbances, has seized, not only the mouth of the Amoor, but a large territory in Mongolia, and has also gained a considerable portion of the tribes which inhabit it. You know that these tribes once overran all Asia, and have twice conquered China. The means has always been the same, some accident which, for an instant, has united these tribes in submission to the will of one man. Now, says the writer very plausibly, the Czar may bring this about, and do what has been done by Genghis Khan, and indeed by others. All Upper Asia is at the mercy of a man, who, though the seat of his power be in Europe, can unite and close on one point the Mongols."—De Tocqueville's Letter to Senior, dated the 16th of September, 1855.

SIR,—A telegram from Calcutta of yesterday's date (December 25) announces that a reduction of the Madras and Bombay Armies is contemplated.

Twenty years ago the English public was enthusiastic for a reduction of the English army. Fortunately the outbreak of the Russian war disturbed our false visions of peace.

Seventeen years ago, when De Tocqueville, who had a sincere admiration for the English, warned us against despising the power of Russia (we were then elated because our allies the French had just captured Sebastopol), our armies were in magnificent condition, and apparently fit for anything.

Then came the Indian Mutiny, and our native regiments dissolved.

Since that time we have never succeeded in displaying great power on land, our strength as usual being chiefly on the water. Neither in China nor in New Zealand were our land forces large. In the Umbeyla Pass campaign we could collect 9,000 men only by denuding the Punjab of troops, and we had to depend on diplomacy for success. In Abyssinia we had a first-rate general to make the most of a small army.

But we cannot always depend on having a diplomatist equal in sagacity to Major James, nor on having a general equal to Lord Napier. In order to protect India effectually we must have the means of concentrating at one month's notice thirty thousand British troops and sixty thousand good native soldiers at Peshawur or at Dera Ghazee Khan or at Shikarpoor.

We cannot do this under present circumstances, and at the same time maintain internal tranquillity in spite of the agitation among our Mahomedan subjects at the idea of the restoration of the Great Moghul on the throne of India.

It would not be necessary for Russia to move a finger. She has only to select a Chief, and to let loose the hordes of Tartar cavalry.

The latter must be met on the West of the Indus, and not allowed to cross that river. We must rub up our knowledge of war rockets, which did such good service on the 18th of October, 1813. Officers must not be allowed to plead for their disuse in India on the ground that the composition dries up, and that then rockets become dangerous to those who use them. Woolwich contains, I believe, formidable war rockets of the latest inventions, and no expense should be spared in accustoming our artillery soldiers to their use. They may be made as valuable in defending the line of the Indus against cavalry as torpedoes are likely to be in defending our harbours and the mouths of our rivers.

The Viceroy of India has just ordered the construction of fortifications at Ferozepore and Mooltan, but we shall not be prepared for war until we have railroads from Hyderabad to Mooltan, and from Attock to Mooltan and to Lahore, and until we have bridges across the Indus at Attock and at Dera Ghazee Khan, and across the Chenab at Moozuffurgurh.—Your obedient servant, T.

WHY DID THE SAUGOR BARRACKS TUMBLE DOWN?

The Delhi Gazette holds that there was no lack of men of high professional standing to build them, there were no unusual natural obstacles to contend with. The work itself was not adventurous in dimensions or plan—no Albert Hall, but a plain brick house of two or three storeys. Government has no hesitation in answering the question. They say it was because Mr. So-and-So did not sufficiently inspect the work, because Captain This or That exhibited an unlooked-for want of engineering talent, and so on. They blame their servants—they punish them, and then smirk complacently to all the world, seeming to say "What a just and righteous Administration we are!" But they are not to be let off so easily. Men are not dolls to be stuffed with such official saw-dust. The servants on whose broad shoulders all blame is so readily thrust have an opinion on the subject, and it is this: the Saugor barracks, and other barracks costing unheard of sums of money, fell because they, in common with most public buildings, and only uncommon in being more unlucky, were built on an entirely rotten system, for which Government, in the persons of various Secretary people, is entirely responsible. The system is the great shifting system. One man digs a foundation, but before it is completed he is succeeded by another, who finishes it and commences the bricklaying, but ere he, in his turn, has erected half a storey some one else is sent down to relieve him of it, and so on, till some one finds himself building the chimneys who never heard of the bygone generations who reared the walls. The consequence, naturally to be expected, is that no one considers himself in the least responsible for anything. No one had the opportunity of carrying out his original design, and no one is supposed to be acquainted with the designs of his successors. Why are these perpetual changes made, then, it will be asked, in defiance of the obvious result? "They are made," says Government, "owing to promotions." When a man is promoted he is removed. Why is he removed? "Owing to the exigencies of the service." Owing rather to Mumbo Jumbo Bumbledom and red tape-worm on the brain.

MOHAMEDAN EDUCATION IN MADRAS.

The Madras Times observes that up to this time the Mohamedans have not yet been allowed to be examined in their own language. They have been examined in the vernacular of the district in which they lived. Thus a Mohamedan living in a Tamil district would have to be examined in Tamil, while another living in a Telugu district would have to undergo the Test in Telugu. This the candidates looked upon as a great hardship. They said their language was the only one in India that was ignored by the Government, and they did not understand why this should be. The Matriculation Examination was the lowest in which Hindustani was given, and very few were able to enter through that door into the Uncovenanted Civil Service. So that the door, as they said, was practically shut against them. But why, it may be asked, did not the Mohamedans try and pass in the vernaculars? They could have read them, and had a good chance of passing an examination in them. To this it may be replied that the Mohamedans find it very difficult to pass in a vernacular. They may be able to speak the language, perhaps well, but still they always fail to pass. We have not been able to account for this. We know that the Mohamedans do not like the vernaculars of the country but when they knew that they must master one of these languages before they could get a situation they would no doubt do their best. Still they very rarely succeeded. Some young Mohamedans have made very fair progress in English, but they do not make the same progress in the vernaculars. They are able as a rule to speak the language well enough to be able to transact the business that is required of them. They speak the vernaculars much better as a rule than Englishmen do, and the latter have to transact all sorts of business in the languages that the natives of this country speak. This order of the Government will remove a real grievance, and will tend to conciliate the Mohamedans. They think that they have been neglected, and that the interests of other classes of the community have always been placed before theirs. Their pride has been a good deal wounded by the treatment they have received, and which they suppose that they have received. They have fancied for a long time past that the Government did not wish to employ them, and therefore threw obstacles in their way. We know that this was not the case, that they would have been employed if they could have passed the required examinations; but they did not view the subject in the same light. They imagined that the Government wished to keep them out of employment. Thus they looked upon themselves as ill-used people, and it is a very dangerous thing for any class of the community to think this. The resolution of Government which was published sometime back, and the present order of Government allowing Hindustani to be considered a vernacular, will prove great blessings to the Mohamedan population of the Presidency, and if they are really anxious to rise in the social scale they can now do so. They have only to exert themselves, and they will be certain to get on. If they fail now, it will be said that they are an inferior race, and that they had better be left to themselves. This is their time of trial, so far as this Presidency is concerned, and it is to be hoped that they will not be found wanting. There is energy enough among the people if only it is properly directed, and probably they will now see the necessity of bestirring themselves.

The Madras Mail thinks that it can hardly be expected that the Director of Public Instruction should think it advisable to make arrangements for separate Mahomedan classes in the Presidency College, so long as schools for Mahomedans exclusively are badly attended. A schoolmaster can only arrange his classes according to the boys actually in his school. He cannot create material; and until the Mahomedans express a wish to enter classes in the Presidency College, or show their desire for education by filling the schools already reserved for their use, it appears unadvisable to form separate classes for a few boys, who perhaps have come to the school with the very idea of becoming acquainted with a vernacular in order to qualify themselves for Government situations. With regard to the Mahomedans in the Mofussil, the scheme may not have been fully tried, but its necessity seems so very obvious to any educationalist, that it is hardly possible to imagine a good school, in which it has not been carried out, where the Mahomedans have shown a sufficient desire for education. We believe that it is not so much the want of schools, or classes, as the want of suitable persons to take an interest in the Mahomedan population, to gain their confidence, and to encourage them to send their children to school. It is a well-known fact that there are but few of any race, who value education for its own sake. It is because an educational standard is made the entrance into Government employ, that Hindoos are so anxious to read in our schools; and it is because by doing so a Mahomedan is not qualified, unless he knows a vernacular also, that he does not show the same eagerness after an English education, or hasten with similar alacrity into our schools. For mere education in Hindustani and Persian, there is full provision amongst the Mahomedans themselves, and in the majority of cases that is all they require. If it be thought desirable that more Mahomedans should be in our schools, then some inducements must be held out. We think it would have been well if Government, before drawing up their order, had enquired into the state of education in Hyderabad. It would then, if we mistake not, have been seen that Mahomedans are not backward to read in schools, when that is the road to Government employment.

THE NEXT BUDGET.

The Indian Daily News will be disagreeably surprised if Sir Richard Temple's next budget does not show another handsome surplus. It was framed indeed to result in what the Finance Member chose to consider "an equilibrium secured by a small surplus;" but the year has passed with improved prospects in the crops, with no demands for remissions of the land revenue, with an average trade, and with opium prices well in advance of Sir Richard's limit. If this year there be deplorable distress in Khandeish, there was last year but a scanty harvest in Southern Orissa and the neighbouring Madras districts. It is again a matter of fact that the Public Works Department has been kept well in hand. We ought also during the current year to receive the benefit of the reductions in army expenditure of the past two years. All this being so, there is every reason for the conclusion that a surplus will be the distinguishing feature of the new budget. Sir Richard Temple will probably go down to the Council, proud to say, and satisfied to say, that deficit has been slain. He will exhibit the head of the Jabberwock of the Indian Government, and "chortle in his joy;" but as no one knows what sort of a process chortling is, his joy will be the solitary happiness of a man who, having made up his mind to pay any price for a certain object, has paid a fancy price and secured his end. But there is this great consideration behind Sir Richard's undoubted achievement of a surplus at all hazards. If experience during four years has shown that expenditure on public works can be controlled, and that a surplus can be secured, a surplus in one case many times over the amount of the income-tax, does not that same experience show that an "equilibrium secured by a small surplus" can be attained without the aid of an income-tax? In fact, the real result of Sir Richard's management of the finances has been to demonstrate the truth of the description of the income-tax as the only financial reserve of the Government. That reserve has been used by the Finance Member of Council to swell his surpluses and enlarge his cash balances.

THE POST OFFICE.—The observations of the Governor-General in Council on the Director-General's Report on the operations of the Post Office of India during the year 1871-72 must be gratifying to all officers in positions of responsibility, more especially to Mr. Monteath, to whom appears to be due the chief credit for the rapid improvement which is in progress in a department which not many years since was one of the worst conducted in India. The increase of accommodation to the public is great and varied. The Brindisi postage to and from England has been reduced to the level shilling. Additional steam services have been accorded to the Tenasserim coast and the Bay of Bengal. A special detective service has been organised with the best results, and its further extension is promised. The Dead Letter Department, which advertises in the Government Gazette (a periodical read by few of the outside public) letters in its custody for persons whose addresses are well known everywhere except in Postal circles, is to be strengthened. The overland money-order system has been introduced, and is working very satisfactorily. Economy has been largely effected, especially in this Presidency and the Punjab, by very simple measures, which in no way affect the efficiency of the service. The increase of business and the financial working of the department are very satisfactory, and the Government of India has every reason to be proud of this branch of its business, which has increased 350 per cent. in seventeen years, with abundance of room for further increase as the lower or popular education of the people has its area enlarged. It is seldom we can have the pleasure of reading so thoroughly commendatory a Government resolution in favour of any great department, and we heartily congratulate Messrs. Monteath and F. R. Hogg, and concur gratefully in the thanks awarded to those officers by the Government of India.—Bombay Gazette.

THE LATE SIR DONALD M'LEOD.—The brief telegram which we issued on Saturday afternoon reporting, in hard pitiless terms, the grievous fate of Sir Donald M'Leod is one that will carry sorrow into every province of India. It is just over two years since he sailed from Bombay, taking final leave of this country, where he had spent a life-time of earnest and successful labour. An experienced contributor of ours, when making reference to his departure, spoke of him as nearly the foremost, "if not the first man in India at that moment," adding—"I have for long years had an eye on M'Leod as one of the best types of an Indian statesman." Then followed comparisons between Sir Donald and more prominent, because more self-asserting men; but these, however just, we need not follow out in connection with the present sad event, which, while it must fall as a severe personal grief on all who ever came into intimate acquaintance with the former ruler at Lahore, is also a heavy loss to India. Though not in the Indian Council, he was a counsellor pre-eminently trustworthy and trusted. In personal intercourse and by correspondence his influence has been quietly, but, we believe, effectively exerted on those more actively engaged in Indian affairs. In the numerous peculiar difficulties that beset our day, and which are more distinctly observed in the Punjab than elsewhere, his sober experience, enlightened discrimination, just feeling, and truthful courageous spirit has been, and—but for this pitiless catastrophe of a moment—would long have been of infinite service to this country and its rulers. Yet it is vain to raise complaint. Short-sighted man must bow humbly to the decree of one who "sitteth on the circle of the earth." Sir Donald M'Leod's service covers the period of a whole generation. When the mutiny came it did not find him unprepared, and he contributed most essential assistance to Sir John Lawrence and others, whom the tide brought more fully to the surface. He took a large part in the work of settling the Punjab after the overthrow of the Sikh power; and in that province, where his earnest desire to maintain the rights of the loyal, and to defend the interest of the dependent classes, are so well known, his loss will be deeply mourned. Though not a writer of learned books, Sir Donald was no mean philologist, and his zeal on behalf of Oriental literature has borne good fruit. Yet, notwithstanding all the high qualities of this statesman thus snatched away, he was to the British public only—a retired Indian official. Amongst the millions of the English population but a handful knew his name; and the publishers do not even reckon him as one of the "Men of the Time."—Times of India, Dec. 2.

THE VICEROY'S PROGRESS.

THE VICEROY IN CENTRAL INDIA.

BARWAI, Dec. 5.—The Viceroy has come, and gone, and the remembrance of his visit to Central India will not speedily be effaced from the minds of those who, as actors or spectators, took part in it. To say that the festivities and ceremonies at Barwai equalled in brilliancy and splendour those which last month turned the heads of Duckland's citizens giddy with excitement, would be an unpardonable exaggeration. The materials here were not, in the nature of things, so vast and various. At Barwai there were many Chiefs, but only one great Maharajah; many spectators, but nearly all were military and political officers; much display, but of an intensely barbaric kind, and without symmetry of proportion and harmony of design; while of European ladies not one graced the scene with her presence. And yet I do not think I am mistaken in believing that most Englishmen would have preferred, as a mere spectacle, Barwai to Bombay. It was purely Oriental, and altogether unlike anything ever seen in your civilised capital. There were the elephants and the camels, and the led horses, and the rich trappings, and the wild, barbaric music, and the myriads of armed followers, which we see in pictures and dreams, but which none can fully realise without actual personal observation; and when that is once accomplished, especially at a Durbar like this on the extensive plain of Barwai, it cannot easily, I think, be forgotten. This is the first State visit to Central India of a Viceroy and Governor-General, and nothing was left undone by Major-General Daly and his Assistants to carry out the arrangements in a manner commensurate with its vast political importance.

But before I begin to narrate the incidents of the Viceroy's visit I must say a word about the locality which the events that have just now transpired will hereafter render memorable. The traveller proceeding to Barwai from Bombay leaves the G.I.P. Railway at Khandwa—a large town distinguished, when I passed through it, by some elegant triumphal arches, and perhaps the ugliest clock-tower in India—after which a ride of forty miles by mail cart or bullock dak along the Mhow road will bring him to Mortukka, a small village on the left bank of the Nerbudda, the head-quarters of the contractors for the Indore State Railway, from which the gleaming tents on the other side of the river are plainly visible. It befel me that I had to traverse the forty miles by bullock dak, and a pleasant eighteen hours' jolting had my companions and I. The country through which we passed, but for the burnt-up appearance of the ground, reminds one almost of English park scenery. The road was in splendid order, and for nearly the whole distance winds through a succession of hills and dales, covered with trees and brushwood, and intersected by numerous streams in which the natives of those parts were washing their clothes, filling their drinking and cooking utensils, and performing their morning ablutions. The air was cool and pleasant—not muggy as in Bombay, nor biting as at the Deccan capital, but bracing and invigorating like a sunny morning at home.

The Viceroy was to arrive at the camp on the following morning (Monday), so, after an early breakfast, I crossed the Nerbudda, and made my way to the scene of action. And here let me pause to describe the aspect of the spot. The vast plateau, extending from the right bank of the river to the Vindhya mountains, eight or ten miles away, was covered as far as the eye could reach with tents of various shape and hue. First came the large encampment for the Viceroy and those who accompanied him, the Durbar and breakfast tents, and a host of others of smaller dimensions. Opposite these, on the other side of the road, all along which Holkar had placed rows of oil lamps, were the tents of the 49th (Princess Charlotte of Wales) Regiment, of the D-9 R. A., of the Bhopal Battalion, and of the Central India Horse, while far beyond these, until lost in the distance, stretched the camps of the eighty native Chiefs and their immense retinues, who had assembled to honour the Viceroy. Scattered here and there were the booths of enterprising Parsees from Mhow and elsewhere, where everything for man and beast could be had on terms more or less reasonable, and the houses of the villages peeped out here and there from among thick clusters of heavy-foliaged trees. The road was crowded, of course; mahouts and camel-drivers were gesticulating furiously; mounted sowars were galloping hither and thither with orders; carpets were being laid; troops forming into line; and Thakore Lal, Holkar's engineer, architect, and decorator in general, with a host of workmen, was putting up the last coating of gold-foil on the triumphal arch through which the Viceroy was soon to pass. Everybody was in a state of intense activity, putting the finishing touches on the preparations, and betokening the nearness of the coming event. It is now eleven o'clock, the roads have been swept and watered, and the troops are taking up their respective positions. Eighty men of the Malwa Bheel Corps, under Major Kincaid, the Bheel Agent; 200 men of the Bhopal Battalion, under Col. Forbes; and 500 men of the Central India Horse, under Col. Watson, V.C., C.B., Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, formed a street from the river to the camp. Two companies and a half of the 49th, with band and colours, under Lieut.-Colonel Goetling, were stationed near the tent as a guard of honour; and Major Hall's battery of field artillery stood by its guns in readiness to fire the royal salute as soon as his Excellency had dismounted. The Central India Horse is a splendid corps, and appears to thoroughly deserve its reputation as the finest body of irregular cavalry in India. All the horses were in beautiful condition, and many of them were pure Arabs. The men, too, seemed proud of the animals they bestrode, and of the regiment to which they belonged.

But all this time his Excellency the Viceroy, driven by Major-General Daly, has been tearing along the road from Khundwah at full gallop, the horses being changed every six miles, and he is now on the left bank of the Nerbudda, crossing over the narrow P.W.D. bridge. His Excellency is met on reaching the right bank by the Maharajah Holkar, who gives to her Majesty's representative a cordial welcome, enters the carriage, and accompanies the Viceroy and General Daly to the encampment. Before they reach the spot, however, all the minor Chiefs, Rajpoots, and Bheels, with long trains of followers, have arrived, and taken their places in the Durbar tent. They are not a very handsome set of men, these same Chiefs, but what they lack in personal beauty they strive to make up by gorgeous raiment and profuse jewellery. Amongst them were the Rajah of Dhar, the senior and junior Rajahs of Dewas, the Nawab of Jowrah, the Rajah of Seetamow, the Rajah of Sillana, the Rajah of Jabooa, the Rajah of Ali Rajpoot, the Rana of Burwanea, the Rajah of Parone (better known as Maun Sing, the same who betrayed Tantia Topce), and the Rajah of Bhadowra. Inside the tent were also Major-General Montgomery, C.S.I., commanding the Mhow division of the army, and staff; Captain J. C. Berkely, the First Assistant to General Daly at Indore; Major Anderson, Assistant Adjutant General, Dr. Beaumont, the Residency Surgeon at Indore; and many politicals and officers off duty. With his unvarying punctuality, the Viceroy drove up at the appointed time, the troops and the guard of honour presenting arms, the band playing the National Anthem, and the battery firing a royal salute. The vast concourse of natives did not particularly distinguish themselves by cheering; that seems foreign to their nature, and is a faculty they have yet to acquire. But this circumstance has not the most remote bearing on their loyalty; it arises solely from their taking everything as a matter of course. Their enthusiasm is developed only in their religion, and when worked up to boiling point, is a fearful power, as we all know by sad experience. His Excellency was dressed in ordinary travelling costume, and was only to be distinguished from any private gentleman by intuition and by the fact that General Daly was his coachman and the Maharajah Holkar his companion. On alighting, the several Chiefs met his Excellency at the door of the tent, and were introduced to him by General Daly. The salaaming and hand-shaking here was soon over, and the Chiefs and their variegated followers rode off to their quarters. Then came two other carriages, the first containing H. E. the Governor of Bombay, Mr. Lee-Warner, his Private Secretary; and Mr. J. H. Morris, the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces; and the second, Mr. H. P. LeMessurier, Agent G.I.P. Railway. Captain Reynardson, Aide de Camp to the Viceroy; and Mr. Muir, Private Secretary to Mr. Morris. And now the rainclouds, which had been hanging about all the forenoon, burst in a perfect deluge; and in five minutes the roof of the tent became useless as a protection from the volume of water, and couches, chairs, and carpets were saturated. The storm departed as suddenly as it came; within a quarter of an hour the sky was as serenely blue as ever, and during the remainder of his stay the Viceroy was favoured with proverbial "Queen's weather." The afternoon was spent by the Viceroy in receiving visits and tributary offerings from the Chiefs, and at night General Daly entertained his Excellency at a private dinner, about which nothing need be said beyond the fact that it was a very pleasant dinner, that the band of the 49th discoursed some most exquisite music, and that there was no speech-making.—Times of India Correspondent.

HOLKAR'S BANQUET.

BARWAI, Dec. 5.—I do not suppose that in the whole course of its existence Barwai ever looked so gay as she did on last Tuesday night, when his Highness the Maharajah Holkar gave the banquet to Lord Northbrook. Looking from the Mortakka side of the Nerbudda at about six o'clock in the evening, the whole of the opposite bank could be seen illuminated and defined by myriads of lights which twinkled in the evening breeze, and made dancing reflections on the dark rolling river beneath. Crossing to the Barwai side the sight abated not a whit of its attractiveness. The road swarmed with a crowd as numerous as that which turned out earlier in the day to see the magnificence of Holkar and Dhar, and the glitter of lesser lights like Jowrah, and the young and elder chiefs of Dewas, and the noise they made was to the full as great. Little brown saucers, filled with wick and oil, adorned each side of the road as far as the eye could reach, and at the end of the range of vision a road of fire could be seen striking off to the right, and terminating among a battalion of lamps that clustered round Holkar's palatial tents. But it was in the grounds which held the Viceroy's camp that the greatest efforts at display had been made, and although the whole illumination was not so grand as many similar scenes which we have witnessed, yet there could be no doubt that it was startling and novel in such an out-of-the-way place as Barwai. The triumphal arch, though pretty enough-looking during the day, now seemed vulgar and garish, the gilt paper in some cases peeling off and flapping about quite miserably. There was a stand erected in front of the Durbar tent, and the piles of coloured lights upon it attracted considerable attention; but of the whole display it may be said that particular designs could not bear close inspection, although the general effect was wonderfully good. On the eminence to the left lights flickered and spluttered; to the right they did likewise to within a short distance of the Nerbudda, dotting every one of the little eminences that stand upon the bank and bear their silent testimony that once upon a time the great river hewed them out when it enjoyed a different channel. In front were the lines of "butties" which I have alluded to as doing duty by the roadside; the "Welcome Lord Northbrook" at one side of the triumphal arch would insist upon showing, according to the whims of the wind, only one-half of "Welcome" and a fraction of the name; and "God save the Queen" on the opposite side of the erection was badly used in a similar manner, notwithstanding the frantic efforts of numerous half-naked and swarthy brown imps to keep the full expression of loyalty properly emblazoned. The durbar tent was used as a reception tent for the gentlemen who had received invitations to his Highness the Maharajah's banquet, and at half-past seven the area was well filled with black, red, and blue-coated gentlemen, representative of the various services, who beguiled away the few ante-prandial minutes of waiting by gathering in groups and talking "shop" politics, or about things in general, or by turning over the pages of a handsome album that, along with other books, had been considerably placed on tables for the amusement of the guests. At eight o'clock the company filed into a long tent which had been erected behind the durbar tent, and when all had taken their places, there could not have been fewer gentlemen present than six score and ten. The Viceroy and General Daly, Sir Philip Wodehouse, Mr. Morris (Commissioner of the Central Provinces), General Norman, all sat together, and the ornaments of the Viceroy and gubernatorial staffs were seated not far off from the luminaries round which they are accustomed to revolve. Candelabra clustered on the table, and there was a perfect blaze of light that glittered among the glasses, and showed off the numerous epergnes that were piled with fruit or flowers—posies which had a beautiful effect—

Shall form a garland for Narcissa's tomb.

To give the quotation any force, we must suppose the viands to be Narcissa, and their excellence was such that they speedily found a tomb. The speech-making was not particularly brilliant—the nearest approach to the quality of brilliance being made by Sir Madava Row, the newly-appointed Dewan to Holkar (and on a salary of Rs. 3,000 a month, too! fancy that, ye toiling gentlemen, who write to please!). He spoke without the slightest accent, and in a slow impressive manner, which was admired by all his listeners. His sentences were polished and rounded to the last degree, and if the sentiments were a little bombastic and pedantically expressed, I forgive him for the charm of his utterance.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

STATION TALK.

NAGPORE, Dec. 1.—On Saturday, the 30th ultimo, H. E. the Viceroy and Governor-General, accompanied by his staff, went into Kamptee; where, after holding a levee in the Public Rooms, he inspected the Kanhan Bridge and some of the European barracks, expressing himself perfectly satisfied with all he saw, and returned to Nagpore at 6 P.M. the same night. His Lordship, accompanied by the Chief Commissioner and other gentlemen, on elephants, went to see the illuminations in the principal streets and city, where there was also a grand display of fireworks. This day, the 1st December, his Excellency attended divine service in All Saint's Church, Seetabuldee, at 11 A.M., when a most impressive sermon was delivered by the Rev. Mr. Carruthers, our much-esteemed chaplain. The church was unusually crowded on this occasion. The Nagpore Volunteer Rifles also marched to church, accompanied by their excellent band. The day being very cool and pleasant, it is said his Lordship walked to and from the church, the distance being about half a mile from the Residency. After lunch his Lordship left Nagpore about 2.30 P.M., by express train, for Khundwa. The triumphal arches, which had the word "Welcome" on them on his Lordship's arrival, were now changed to "Farewell." Grand preparations, I am told, are being made at Khundwa for the Viceroy's reception. The troops that came in from Kamptee to Nagpore have returned, and Nagpore has once more settled down to its usual quiet and every-day manner of life. Lord Northbrook, I am glad to say, has made a most favourable impression on everyone in Nagpore and Kamptee who has had the pleasure of seeing him; and he leaves us with the hearty good wishes of each and all.

POONA, Dec. 2.—A parade of the force assembled here for exercise took place this morning at Hurripsur. It had been conjectured that the state of the ground would prevent the assemblage of the force, for rain fell somewhat heavily during the afternoon of yesterday, and as I now write (4 P.M. of Monday) there are the plainest indications overhead that more is likely to fall, and speedily. These forebodings, however, proved the merest moonshine, for although the roads were muddy, the state of the ground was all that could be desired. I shall not enter into a detailed account of the morning's movements, for I noticed nothing that was particularly new or out of the common way. The Artillery, with its accustomed celerity and precision, and "the thin red line" of infantry was as steady, and I have no doubt if it came to the pinch as formidable, as that composed of the men who covered themselves with glory on the banks of the Alma. At the conclusion of the morning's manoeuvres, the Artillery returned to their encampment and the infantry to their barracks in the cantonment. For Wednesday morning food of a more solid description is in preparation—for under orders from army head-quarters, a force to be commanded by Brigadier Barrow is directed to encamp on ground in rear of Hurripsur. The troops are to leave camp at 4.30 to-morrow, and arrangements have been ordered to be made so that they may get their day's rations at the new encampment. But the crowning glory is intended to be achieved on the morning of Wednesday. On that day the position of Hurripsur is to be attacked at daybreak. I have an inward conviction that General Grant will hold the position entrusted to him with the utmost tenacity; that everything that skill can effect or valour command will be tried by him on this interesting occasion, but if his Excellency be the assailant, I cannot help surmising his most deeply-laid plans will be frustrated, and that honourable defeat alone is the fate in store for the General.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

MILITARY.—Colonel Jenkins, 19th Hussars, is reported as about to exchange with Colonel Baker, of the 10th Hussars.

LOSS OF THE "WELLESLEY."—The B. S. Wellesley was totally lost in the Hooghly on the 30th Nov., whilst proceeding to sea. All hands were saved with the exception of one lascar.

SALT IN KULU.—Indications of salt deposits have been discovered near a hot spring in the Saisai Kothi of Waziri Rupi. This makes the third locality where salt is known to exist in Kulu.

THE LADAKH.—The Yarkand kafilas has arrived at last in Ladakh. The snow has been very heavy on the higher ranges, and there is scarcely a chance of any traders being able to come down through Lahoul and Kulu.

WADHWAN EXHIBITION.—The exhibition at Wadhwan was opened on the 2nd Dec. It contains agricultural substances, animals, fruits, vegetable, corn, and other miscellaneous goods. Rs. 1,000 have been set apart for prizes.

A NEW SCHOLARSHIP.—The Maharajah of Patiala has offered a scholarship in perpetuity of Rs. 2,000 annually, besides passage-money, amounting to Rs. 3,000, to cover the expenses of the journey to and from England, to any one of candidates from the Punjab who may be desirous of competing in the Civil Service examination in England.

SUBSCRIPTION TO THE CIVIL FUNDS.—The question of receiving subscriptions on account of the Civil Fund from the Native members of the Covenanted Civil Service who have recently entered the service has been referred to and disposed of by the Home Government. It appears that the Government of Bengal declined to permit the Native Civil Servants to subscribe to the fund, or, in other words, declined to extend the benefit of the Family Pension of their widows and children as provided for by Article 1st of the Civil Fund Rules, on the ground of the difficulty of identifying Native females. The officers concerned hereupon made a representation to the Government of India, who acquiesced in the views of the Local Government. A memorial was subsequently forwarded to the Secretary of State, who seems to be of opinion that no alteration of the existing rules of the service should be made at present, so far as the Native Civil Servants, who have already entered the service, are concerned. They have entered into a covenant with the Home Government on the same conditions as other European officers, and these conditions are equally binding on them, as well as on the State Secretary. It would be, therefore, a breach of faith on the part of Government; if any one of the conditions of the covenant is now altered. His Grace is also said to have observed that if the Government of India so recommend, he would modify the terms of the Government with native Civil Servants in future, and thereby withdraw the privilege of subscribing to the Civil Fund.

STATE OF WEATHER AND CROPS IN BENGAL.—From the official reports of the state of the weather and the crops during the week ending on the 30th Nov., it appears that, although no favourable change is reported from the Burdwan and Hooghly Districts, where the fever is decreasing very slightly, the winter crops are progressing satisfactorily in the other districts of the Burdwan Division; and in Midnapore a splendid outturn is expected, thanks to the heavy rain at the end of October, and prices show a decided tendency to fall. Fever, however, is unusually prevalent in some parts of the town of Howrah. In the Presidency Division the amun crop is being gathered in, and the cold weather crops are progressing "pretty well;" but fever and cholera continue to prevail in several places in the 24-Pergunnahs District, and the latter is bad in the head quarters, the Barrackpore and the Diamond Harbour Sub-divisions. No reports were received this week from Nuddea, but our readers will remember that the crops were previously reported as progressing favourably. From the Rajshahye Division the reports are very hopeful, and a very high outturn (varying from 12 to 16 annas) is expected generally. In the Cooch Behar Division, although the Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling was informed, while on tour, that the harvest in the hills had been very poor, the cold weather rice sowings are getting on very well in all the districts, and tobacco planting is going on in Julpigoree. Every thing promises well in the districts of the Dacca Division, and in Sylhet a better crop than even that of last year is expected; but there is some cholera at Baroni in the Dacca District. From the districts of the Chittagong Division also the returns are favourable, and about half the cotton crop in the Hill Tracts of Chittagong has been gathered in. The returns from the Patna Division are more hopeful than in the previous week, though rain is said to be wanted in Gya and Sarun. In the latter district irrigation has been resorted to for the rubber crops. "Everything promises most favourably for the rubber crops" in Monghyr, and the reports from the other districts of the Bhaugulpore Division are slight variations on the report from Monghyr. From Rajmehal the health report shows some improvement. In the Orissa Division, the crop prospects are generally favourable, though some injury is anticipated from the heavy rain which fell in Cuttack during the previous week. From the Chota Nagpore Division the reports speak of expectations of a fair crop, though rain is required to bring out the rubber crop in Palamou. In the districts of the Assam Division the crop prospects are generally promising, but cholera is still prevalent in Sebsaugor.—Indian Daily News.

STATION TALK.

BELLARY, Nov. 20.—The great event of the past week has been the visit of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to this dull spot. He arrived here on Sunday, the 10th inst., and was met at the railway station by General Woods, his staff, and heads of departments, together with commanding officers, and was escorted to the house of General Woods, by a detachment of the 2nd Madras Light Cavalry, under the command of a native officer. I hear that the Chief was highly pleased with the appearance and soldierlike bearing of his escort. The next morning H.M.'s 48th Foot paraded for inspection, and went through all it was called upon to do, with credit to itself. On Tuesday the Light Field Battery was put through its facings, and acquitted itself well. It was a subject of general remark that the guns were exceedingly well-horsed. On Wednesday the 2nd Light Cavalry was brought on the field to be scrutinised, and went through its work in a very creditable manner, so much so, that his Excellency more than once expressed himself highly pleased with all that he had seen. From what I hear his Excellency remarked that although the regiment in strength had fallen below what he should like to see, yet in efficiency and appearance it upheld the good name which the Madras Cavalry had always preserved as its right. On Thursday, the 4th and 16th N.I. were brigaded together under the command of Colonel Jones of the former corps, and I hear that his Excellency was not altogether satisfied with the display. On Friday morning the Grand Review took place, and long before daylight crowds of natives of all sorts and descriptions, some on nondescript conveyances, but most on foot, were wending their way towards the Race Course, where the tumasha was to take place. The troops were drawn up in line on the ground close by the European Infantry Barracks facing the east, the Madras Cavalry on the right, then the Field Battery, the 48th Foot, 4th and 16th N. I. On the arrival of the Chief, accompanied by a brilliant staff (as the penny-a-liners phrase it), a salute was fired, and the Brigade presented arms, when the Line was minutely inspected and the Brigade marched past, which I believe gave every satisfaction. After this was concluded, the great business of the day commenced. It would occupy too long a time to describe the tactics, even if I were able to do so, but suffice to say, that the most fastidious could hardly have found fault with any of the proceedings or manoeuvres, and his Excellency, I believe, expressed himself highly gratified with all he had seen, and especially mentioned that he was agreeably surprised to see the N.I. Brigade do so well after the fiasco of the previous morning. It would be invidious to criticise where all did so well, and General Woods is to be congratulated on having so efficient a force under him, as well as on the able manner in which he commanded it. On Saturday the Commander-in-Chief left by the afternoon train, escorted from General Woods' house to the railway station by a troop of the 2nd Madras Cavalry, and was met on the platform by a large number of officers, civil and military, who assembled to bid him farewell, thus testifying to the popularity he had achieved during the short period he had remained in the place. There would have been a much larger amount of gaiety during his stay had the health of his Excellency admitted of his accepting the invitations that were given to him. As the train left the railway station the guns of the Field Battery belched forth a salute, and thus ended the Book of the Chronicles of Sir Frederick Haines.—Madras Times Correspondent.

TRAMWAYS.—The proposals of a tramway company represented in Madras by Messrs. Dymes and Co. have been sanctioned by the Madras Government, and the plan for making the tramways is now probably in course of shipment at an English port, so that before long we shall have tramways in the streets and roads of Madras.

THE CHEMBRUMBAUKUM TANK.—Great apprehensions were entertained during the last heavy rains with regard to the Chembumbaikum Tank. The water of the tank rose very high, and there was great danger of an overflow. All the precautions that were necessary were taken, and Lord Hobart, on the afternoon of Friday last, visited and inspected the tank.—Madras Times, Dec. 9.

GENERAL MACKENZIE.—Major-General Colin Mackenzie, C.B., of the Mysore Division, will, it is stated, go home shortly.

DEATH OF MRS. COOPER.—We are sure that many of our readers will be sorry to hear of the death at Bangalore, from jungle fever, of Mrs. G. C. Cooper. This lady's talents as an actress were of a very high order, and the admiration of all who have had the pleasure of witnessing her performances at our little private theatre at College Hall. Ever willing to aid in increasing our rather small stock of amusements, she had promised to come down to Madras to take part in some of the performances of the present season. But she preferred first—and let those who malign Anglo-Indian wives take a note of it—to accompany her husband, Captain Cooper, of the police, on a tour of duty through the jungle districts of Salem. It was here that she caught the fever that has unhappily proved her death.—Madras Mail.

THE CARNATIC RAILWAY.—The Carnatic Railway is not progressing very rapidly. It appears that the tracings of the designs of structures, detailed schedules and estimates for the lines from Madras to Cuddalore have been completed and sent forward to Government as well as to the Board of Revenue, the surveys and sections having been previously submitted. The Chief Engineer's office staff has also been engaged in the preparation of indents, supplementary estimates, and in completing some additional plans and information asked for by the Consulting Engineer, as well as such of the working drawings as could be proceeded with. The field-work of the survey for the Southern Extension of Cuddalore to the river Coleroon, via Chedumbrum, has been commenced within the last three months.—Madras Times.

FUEL FOR RAILWAYS.—One of the chief features in the working expenses of all Indian Railways is the cost of the fuel burned in the locomotives, and in order to reduce this to a minimum, the effect of the construction and use of all the railways and other means of communication leading from the sources of fuel supply to the depot, where the fuel has to be stored for consumption, has to be considered. On the railways in the Madras Presidency the fuel now used appears to be wood, and imported English or Australian coal and patent fuel, so that the collieries of India have not yet been drawn upon for the supply required. Whether this could, under possible arrangement, be done with advantage is a matter on which the Government of India would be glad to receive the opinion of the Government of Madras and their advisers. The Consulting Engineer has accordingly been instructed to enter into a calculation of the probable result of getting coal from the Lower Godavery fields by inland water carriage to Madras, after the completion of the East Coast Canal, and of using it wholly or in part on the railways under the control of the Government of Madras. The Government of India will be glad also to receive any other information or calculations on other modes of obtaining and using coal.

THE LATE LORD HARRIS.—The telegraph brings us the news of the death of Lord Harris, formerly Governor of Madras, and grandson of the hero of Seringapatam. Lord Harris was born in 1810, and was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his degree in 1831. The first post that he held under Government was that of Lieutenant-Governor of Trinidad, of which island he was afterwards made Governor and Commander-in-Chief. In 1854 he was made Governor of Madras, and he held the post until 1861, when he was succeeded by Sir Charles Trevelyan. Lord Harris was never a very popular Governor, neither was he a very brilliant one. Perhaps the apprenticeship that he served in Trinidad was not the best preparation for the Government of a large country like the Madras Presidency. He was considered a very able Governor when he was in Trinidad, but he was considered a second or third rate Governor in Madras. He was Governor during the period of the mutiny, and he did one good thing during that time. He sent off without orders from the Supreme Government that splendid regiment the 1st Madras Fusiliers with the gallant Neill in command of them. How they accomplished their work, and how they fought is told in history, and ought never to be forgotten. On the parade ground at Benares they struck a blow which was followed up till the mutiny was trodden out. There was no mutiny in the Madras Presidency, but we cannot say that this was owing to the skill and foresight of Lord Harris. The native army was thoroughly loyal, and some of the sepoys were sent up to put down the mutiny in Bengal. It was whispered at the time that Lord Harris personally showed a little too much fear, and he certainly took care to be well guarded when there was a panic in Madras. He was right probably, but there were some curious remarks made about the care he took of himself. He was thanked by Parliament when the mutiny was over for what he did, but that was not much. There were no signs of rebellion in this Presidency, and therefore there was little to be done. But in one respect Lord Harris took great precaution, that was with reference to the press. He put the Gagging Act in force in this Presidency with a high hand. This Act was a monstrous absurdity. It was thought that through the means of the English press the natives might get hold of information which might lead them to rebel. The absurdity lay in this, that the natives knew a great deal better what was going on than the Government did. Then to make the absurdity greater, the native press throughout the country said whatever it thought proper, while it was impossible to stop the mouths of the natives in the bazaars and in the mosques. But Lord Harris loved not the English press, and perhaps the reason was that it sometimes spoke the truth a little too plainly for his taste. The Act was found to be useless, and its authors lived to be heartily ashamed of it.—Madras Times.

STATION TALK.

POONA, Nov. 30.—There was another great parade of all arms this morning at Hurrispur. The troops were formed up about half an hour before gun-fire, in accordance with orders issued on a former day, and the different positions were advanced about half-a-mile beyond the point described in my last letter. The Cavalry Brigade furnished pickets, which were posted on the previous evening. A small number of tents was issued to the 3rd Hussars for the occasion, and the amount of ammunition supplied was equal to that granted on a former day. At the conclusion of the morning's work, in which, I regret to say, a man was rather severely hurt, the Artillery returned to their encampment, which is now contiguous to Hurrispur, and the Infantry marched back to barracks. It would be difficult to find a more animated scene than the great plain near Hurrispur presented this morning. It is admirably suited to the purpose, being of great extent, nearly level, and, for the most part, free from nullahs. Imagine to yourself then this great plain backed up by heights of very considerable elevation, some in shade and others gradually lighting up with the rays of the fast rising sun: and, in the foreground, a steady and compact force of some eight thousand men. I speak without book, and there may have been more on the ground—with a well-horsed and admirably appointed artillery, and such troopers as follow Colonel Vyse and Captain Stack to keep them in countenance. I have heard much lamentation expressed over the cost of the present gathering, but setting apart the consideration that this large body of men was collected together for the purpose of paying a proper tribute of respect to the Governor-General of India, if, in the day of need we are to utilise to the utmost the admirable materials we undoubtedly possess, opportunity must be given to Generals of division and others in high command to display the result of thought and study in the cabinet upon the field, and this opinion is held by all soldiers of standing and experience. The movements were of a varied character, embracing a charge of cavalry, this latter being one of those things which, in the wars of the future, we may possibly read about, but very seldom see. Few, very few, of the finest regiment of cavalry in the world could hope to reach the face of the infantry square from a distance of a thousands yards, supposing the foot soldier to be armed with the Snider or some other weapon of equal or even greater powers. I hear that Sir Augustus Spencer will be on the ground and in command to-morrow morning. His Excellency's tactical skill and power of combination are well known, and the morrow should be full of suggestion to both young and old soldiers.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

MUNICIPAL.—Mr. W. G. Pedder's appointment as Acting Municipal Commissioner for the City of Bombay appears in Thursday's Government Gazette. He was to be in Bombay at the beginning of the present week; but the passage of the Viceroy of India through the Central Provinces kept him there. He is now in Bombay, and assumed charge of his new office on Friday.—Bombay Gazette, Dec. 9.

DEATH OF DR. MILLER.—We regret to have to announce the death of Dr. A. H. Miller, Residency Surgeon at Baroda, from paralysis, on Friday evening. Though of short service he was well known for his professional skill and high talent, which, had he lived, would doubtless have won him a great name. He is deeply regretted by a large circle of friends, who appreciated his kindly manner and generous disposition.—Bombay Gazette, Dec. 9.

CHIEFS OF KATTYWAR.—A correspondent of the Bombay Summachar contradicts the assertion made in some native papers that the sums given away by the Chiefs of Kattywar in honour of the Duke of Edinburgh's visit to this city were realised by them from their respective ryots by the imposition of a special tax. He says that he is a ryot of one of the Kattywar Chiefs, and vouches for the truth of his assertion that none of the Rajahs of this province have imposed a new tax for the above purpose.

LITERATURE.—During the quarter ending 30th September last, 77 books, 2 pamphlets, and 15 periodicals were published in the Bombay Presidency. Of the works, 27 were in Guzerathee, 5 in Sanscrit and Marathee, 6 in Canarese, 3 in English and Marathee, 3 in English and Guzerathee, 21 in Marathee, 3 in Arabic, 4 in Sanscrit, 1 in Guzerathee and English, 11 in English, 2 in Sanscrit and English, 2 in Hindustani, 1 in Marathee and Sanscrit, 1 in Hindustani and English, 1 in Arabic, Persian, and Hindustani, 2 in Hindustani, Persian, Arabic, and English, and 1 in Pehlvi and Zend (in Guzerathee character).

IMPORTS OF RAW COTTON INTO BOMBAY.—From a statement submitted to Government by the officiating cotton commissioner, we see that during the weeks ending Nov. 16 and 23 10,888 cwts. of raw cotton were imported into Bombay by land, 1,812½ cwts. by the B.B. and C.I. Railway, 7,073½ cwts. by the G.I.P. Railway, 1,509 cwts. by the East India Railway, and 493 cwts. by the Madras Railway. From another statement we see that during the weeks ending Nov. 24 and 30 29,154 cwts. of raw cotton were imported into Bombay by land, 1,150 cwts. from the Persian Gulf, 37 cwts. from the Red Sea, 916 cwts. from the province of Sind, 983 cwts. from the Madras Presidency, 8,273 cwts. from Cutch, 9,211 cwts. from British Concan, and 8,584 cwts. from British Goojerat.

THE CROPS AND WEATHER.—The heavy fall of rain in Khandeish at the commencement of this week has injured the cotton crop considerably, though it has been very beneficial to the grain crop. A large quantity of cotton has been left in the fields unpicked, and this must be very much stained and otherwise injured by the rain. In the Southern Mahratta country trade is unprecedentedly dull, the exports from Vingorla are only 560 decras, and from Coompta 1,000 for the fortnight, and from Carwar about 700 for the same period. The quality of the cotton inspected is described as being "most excellent." For the Bombay spinning mills a great deal of the Southern Mahratta country cotton has been bought this year, and a great deal is now on its way to Bombay, and large purchases are still being made.—Times of India.

THE RECENT POISONINGS IN BOMBAY.—The mystery attending the atrocious poisoning of the De Ga family and their relatives appears to be as far as ever from elucidation. A reward of Rs.1,500 has been offered for the discovery of the cooly who took the two bundles of medicated cakes to the house at Grant-road, but with no success. The coroner holds his fourth sitting to-morrow. The evidence hitherto taken is curious in regard to the manners and customs of the class to which the victims belonged, such as the fact of two brothers living under the same roof and eating at the same table for four years without speaking; the intimacy, and, so to speak, equality of Portuguese masters and native servants, who talk and laugh together with death in the house; the extraordinary appetite for sweetmeats which never deserts an Eurasian at any age or in any condition of life. They seem to take to cake and jam as naturally as a European does to oyster sauce or soda-and-brandy. It is possible that a Portuguese lawyer would be more successful in obtaining fresh clues, or working out those already obtained, than Dr. Hewlett and the European attorneys and police engaged in the investigation; for the inner life of many Eurasian families is as much a sealed book to us as that of the harem or the zenana.—Bombay Gazette, Dec. 2.

BOMBAY, BARODA, AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.—We are glad to learn that intelligence was received by last mail that the Board of Directors of the B. B. and C. I. Railway have represented to the India office the advisability of giving a gratuity of two months' pay to Messrs. Richmond, Hall, Bayley, and Hargreaves, of the B. B. and C. I. Railway, in recognition of their excellent and zealous services in repairing the great damage done to the line by the floods last monsoon. Some recognition of these services is, we think, due, for as is well known, the repairs were carried out by them much quicker than was anticipated by even the most sanguine. We understand that only one-third of the material supposed to be lost is unrecoverable. The remaining two-thirds has been saved, and will be used for the rebuilding of the broken bridges; and the entire cost of the repairs will not, it is now estimated, exceed four or five lakhs of rupees, which must be most satisfactory to the directors, for, if we remember aright, it was thought when the disaster occurred that it would take twenty lakhs of rupees to replace what was washed away. For the Par Bridge larger tubes than were used before are on their way out from England, so that it is hoped that that bridge will be quite safe for the future.—Bombay Gazette.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

MINT AND CURRENCY.

Oct. 4.—No. 3,299.—Read Sec. 16, Act. XXIII. of 1870, the Indian Coinage Act, 1870.

Read again Mint and currency proceedings of Jan. 1871, No. 19, being the rules prescribed by the Governor General in Council for the guidance of officers authorised to cut or break coin under the said section.

Also Mint and currency proceedings No. 66 of March 1872, and Nos. 3 to 6 of May, 1872, by which it was explained that quarter rupees and eighths of a rupee are legal tender for their nominal value, even though they have lost more than two per cent. in weight by reasonable wearing.

Resolution.—Upon a re-consideration of these proceedings, the Right Hon. the Governor General in Council observes that while it is very necessary, in order to the preservation of the integrity of the coinage, to withdraw from circulation rupees and half rupees which have lost more than two per cent. in weight by reasonable wearing, and which are, therefore, no longer legal tender in payment or on account under section 13 of the Act, it is not necessary or expedient to treat with the same strictness quarter rupees and eighths of a rupee which have lost more than two per cent. in weight by reasonable wearing.

2. These coins do not cease, by mere loss of weight, to be a legal tender in payment or on account under section 13. They do not forfeit this attribute unless they have been clipped, or filed, or defaced, or diminished otherwise than by use.

3. The manufacture of these small coins is expensive, and the wear and tear by their use considerable, especially in some parts of the country. They are legal tender only for fractions of a rupee, and no public inconvenience is likely to be caused, even though they become, by loss of weight through wearing, mere token coins. It may even happen that some advantage to the circulation may arise from not withdrawing such a coin in this condition owing to there being less temptation to melt coins so diminished in weight. Moreover, in the case of such small coins, it may not be easy with ordinary appliances to ascertain so slight a loss of weight as two per centum.

4. The Governor General in Council is accordingly pleased to decide that, in future, quarter rupees and eighths of a rupee shall not be cut or broken or withdrawn from circulation only because they have lost, by reasonable wearing, more than two per cent. in weight.

5. The rules prescribed for the guidance of officers authorised to cut or break coin under section 16 of the Indian Coinage Act, 1870, should accordingly be modified, and all proceedings, not in accordance with the present resolution, cancelled.

ORDER.—Ordered, that this resolution and the following notification be published in the Gazette of India :—

NOTIFICATION.

In exercise of the power conferred by Section 16 of the Indian Coinage Act, 1870, the Governor General in Council is pleased to declare that every officer in charge of a Government treasury, every commissioner, deputy or assistant commissioner of the Department of Issue of the Government paper currency, the secretary and treasurer of each of the Banks of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, and every agent in charge of a branch of any of the said banks, is authorised to act under this section.

And in exercise of the powers conferred by Section 28 of the same Act, the Governor General in Council is pleased to revoke the notifications and resolutions in this department noted in the margin,* and to prescribe the following rules :—

1. When any silver coin, purporting to be coined and issued under the authority of the Government of India, is tendered to any of the officers authorised by this notification to act under Section 16 of the Indian Coinage Act, 1870, who has reason to believe it to be counterfeit, or to have been reduced in weight otherwise than by reasonable wearing, he shall cut and break such coin, and, under Section 16 of the said Act, return the pieces to the person tendering the coin.

2. When any rupee, or half rupee purporting to be coined and issued under the authority of the Government of India is tendered to any such officer who has reason to believe it to have lost, by reasonable wearing, more than two per cent. in weight, he shall cut or break such coin, and at the option of the person tendering the coin, return to him the pieces, or retain them and pay to him their value at the rate of one rupee for one hundred and eighty grains troy weight.

3. A quarter rupee, or an eighth of a rupee, tendered to such an officer must, under Section 13 of the Act, be accepted as legal tender for a fraction of a rupee, even though it have lost, by reasonable wearing, more than two per cent. in weight.

4. If by reason of the obliteration of the device upon it, or for any other cause, any quarter rupee or eighth of a rupee that shall come into the possession of such an officer shall appear to him to be unfit for further circulation, it shall not be cut or broken, but shall, whatever be its weight, be withdrawn from circulation, and dealt with in the manner prescribed in Rule 5. But quarter rupees and eighths of a rupee shall not be withdrawn from circulation, if they appear to be otherwise fit to circulate, only because they have lost, by reasonable wearing, more than two per cent. in weight.

5. The pieces of coin cut or broken and paid for under Rule 2, and the coin withdrawn from circulation under Rule 4, shall be sent by the first convenient opportunity to the Master of the Mint at Bombay or Calcutta. Meanwhile, the actual sum paid for the cut or broken pieces, and the nominal value of the coin withdrawn, shall be entered in the statement of the cash balance of the officer who has received them as "uncurrent coin." Upon their receipt at the Mint, the Master of the Mint shall give credit for them at the same values, and any loss incurred in their re-coining shall be a charge of the Mint.

6. No officer of any of the Presidency banks shall exercise any of the powers conferred on him by this notification save in respect of coin received by him on behalf of Government.

SCINDE, PUNJAB, AND DELHI RAILWAY.

The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on Dec. 23, at the London Tavern; Mr. W. P. Andrew, the chairman, presiding. The secretary having read the notice convening the meeting, the report, an abstract of which has appeared, was taken as read.

The Chairman said that he had on former occasions to deplore the loss of colicagues, but on the present occasion he had to deplore the loss of two directors by the death of Mr. J. E. Anderdon and Sir Donald M'Leod, the deputy-chairman, under circumstances of a peculiarly distressing nature. Mr. Anderdon had joined the board on the formation of the company in 1854, and had always given great care and attention to the interests of the company. Although it was less than two years since the late deputy-chairman, Sir Donald M'Leod, accepted a seat at the board, Sir Donald, who had ever at heart the advancement and prosperity of India, had from the commencement of the company's operations taken the liveliest interest in the progress of the Indus Valley system of railways, which he considered as of vital importance. He had at all times while in India afforded the company a statesmanlike support. The directors would not cease to lament his untimely removal from among them, while the loss to the company by his death could not be repaired. He then referred to the immediate business of the meeting. Lord Northbrook had recently passed over their railway, and was entitled to their best thanks for the interest he had taken in their railway, and the kind of difficulties which had been surmounted by their officers. He assured the authorities that the harbour works at Kurrachee should be continued until finished. He also stated that the Indus Valley should be immediately proceeded with. He need not say that until those works were completed no prosperity could accrue to their undertaking. It was essential both for their interests and the interests of India that the harbour works should be completed, and also the connecting link between the Scinde and the Punjab railways. The cotton of Scinde was good, and Lord Northbrook had stated as his opinion that the duty on that article should be abolished. The export of cotton from India had not gone on without some interruption; the management had been defective, its staple was not so long as that of American cotton, but machinery and cotton-presses had been imported into India and the cotton was now cleansed, and pressed and conveyed in a marketable state to the port of shipment. The export of cotton from India had considerably increased, and now brought a much higher price than formerly. The value of it last year amounted to one-third of the whole of the Indian imports. In 1861-62 the value of cotton exported was £10,250,000; in the cotton famine of 1864-65 it was £37,500,000; in 1866-7 it was £16,500,000; and now it was about £20,000,000. It stood next to the American cotton in England, and was equal to any other cotton imported. The quantity of cotton shipped had increased from 8,885 tons to 11,134 tons last year, showing an increase of 25 per cent. The damage from floods on their line and traffic had gone on increasing, and the working expenses had not diminished so much as they expected. The receipts for passengers had increased by £2,321, and for goods by £30,935; the working expenses had decreased £2,021, leaving the increase in the net receipts £35,279. The increase in the number of passengers was 68,576, and in the tonnage of goods 34,312 tons; that gave them an index of the traffic which might be expected to flow over their system when the harbour works were completed. The break of gauge which was being introduced into India by the Government was a very serious question, and he hoped that common sense would soon prevail to arrest its progress. He trusted that the whole system would be reconsidered, and that the truth would be thoroughly sifted. The break of gauge had been rejected in the Australian Assembly. It was strongly opposed in America, and he trusted that the break of gauge would not be inflicted on the brave and useful people in the Punjab. It had recently been stated that the question of gauge would be gone into by the Governor-General, and he trusted it would be dealt with in an able and proper manner.

Mr. T. Williams, a director, seconded the resolution for the adoption of the report.

Mr. G. P. Bidder, the consulting engineer, explained with regard to the failure of the bridges on the Delhi Railway, that owing to the treacherous nature of the rivers and the erratic currents they frequently took, he had stipulated that the contractors should keep that line in repair for three years after construction. The Government interfered and reduced the time to one year, the consequence was that a great part of the principal bridge had been swept away, and the company instead of the contractor would have to make it good. The same authorities were now about establishing a break of gauge in India which would have a most injurious effect on the traffic, and sooner or later would have to be altered to the standard gauge at vast expense to the country. The broad gauge had been sanctioned by Parliament in England years ago, but now a great portion of it had been taken up and replaced by the narrow gauge, to make it uniform with other railways in the kingdom. The broad gauge was now confined to the line from London to Bristol, Exeter, and Cornwall, that from Swindon to Milford Haven having been removed a few months ago at great expense. The break of gauge was generally a great evil. In India they had a 5½ ft. gauge, and the Government had recently introduced the 3 ft. 3½ in. gauge for the State lines. Besides the evil of a break of gauge, the narrow line and small rolling-stock would be found totally inadequate for the traffic of the country, and in case of war it would be most disastrous. He believed that if there had been a break of gauge between Germany and France there would never have been the siege of Paris. He recommended that the different Indian railway companies should send a powerful deputation to the Duke of Argyll on the subject of the gauge, with a view to discuss the matter, and have that serious error corrected.

The report was unanimously adopted, and a cordial vote of thanks to the chairman and directors concluded the proceedings.

Miscellaneous.

FAILURE OF AN INDIAN FIRM.—Circulars have been issued announcing the suspension of Messrs. John Samuels and Co., of Manchester, merchants in the India and China trade. The liabilities are not known definitely, but are understood to be about £90,000.

LONDON, BOMBAY, AND MEDITERRANEAN BANK.—The official liquidators of the London, Bombay, and Mediterranean Bank (Limited) have, with the sanction of Vice-Chancellor Wickens, declared a fourth dividend of 1s. in the pound, making 6s. 6d. in the pound.

INDIAN VETERINARY SURGEONS.—Our attention has been called to the flagrant injustice of keeping old Indian veterinary officers of twenty-four years' service and upwards without a single step of promotion since the day they entered the service. The story is too long to tell at the present moment, but we hear that Queen's veterinary surgeons are duly promoted, and there are young men serving in India that were in swaddling-clothes when some of the Indian or local army veterinary surgeons were fighting their country's battles. If we mistake not, a warrant has been published which should have the effect of preventing this injustice, but its provisions seem to be ignored except in so far as they apply to Queen's officers. Further information on this subject would be desirable.—Broad Arrow.

THE RECENT TELEGRAM FROM CHINA.—"A reduction and reorganisation of the Madras and Bombay Armies are contemplated:" so ran an Indian telegram in the Times of Thursday. "A reduction and reorganisation are contemplated." Against the latter we cannot demur, seeing how brief is the wording of the paragraph from which we glean information of the coming change. "Reduction" is at all times in our ears. Is India over-garrisoned? Certainly not, by Europeans. It is the generally expressed opinion of those cognisant with the habits and temper of the native population, that the events of 1857-58 are not entirely blotted out from the minds of those who, after a considerable struggle, were so severely crushed. Indian politicians are apt to run away with the idea that soldiers have become somewhat of an expensive luxury. "There is no more territory for us to gain," they contend, "and no enemy to attack that which we have conquered already." They forget, though, that treacherous and dangerous foe which exists in their midst ready at any moment to rise against them.—Army and Navy Gazette.

THE BEGINNING OF THE END.—We have reason to believe that communications will shortly be addressed to officers of various ranks at home on leave to the effect that the local Government, to which they severally belong, having reported that certain officers are not considered eligible for further public service, the Secretary of State for India has resolved to call upon them to submit, before the 1st of March, 1873, an application to retire from the service. In the case of a captain not entitled to full-pay, but to whom the promise of half-pay would be thought likely to create difficulty, a special pension of £160 per annum is to be awarded; and to a Brevet-Colonel, a Lieutenant-Colonel, and a Major, the next higher pension to which they will be entitled in March, 1873, is to be given "in consideration of the length and character of their previous services." An intimation that unless the "happy despatch" is voluntarily performed, the officer will, on the date mentioned, be placed on the retired list, is to close these very satisfactory letters. We congratulate the Indian Army upon the way in which the authorities are about to recognise its long and meritorious service; for as no reference is to be made to the state of health as a reason for the treatment to which such officers are to be subjected, we can only conclude that the long-talked-of black list is no longer to be a myth, and that whilst the authorities still assert that there are not too many officers, those who unfortunately have not friends at Court, or who for some reason best known to the Indian Government, are thought to be the fittest objects, are to be singled out as the first to whom the pruning-knife of economy is to be applied in the interest of the poor taxpayers of India. But will not the carrying into effect of this resolution of the Secretary of State for India create a further, and certainly not the least, grievance inflicted on the Indian Army?—Home News.

ARMY SIGNALLING.—The next class for instruction in army signalling will be formed at Chatham on the 1st March, 1873.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.—The report of the directors of this company states that the length of railway open had been slightly increased by alterations and additions to sidings for the accommodation of traffic, and now consisted of 415½ miles of double and 866 miles of single line, equal, inclusive of sidings, to 1,966 miles of single road. The number of passengers carried during the half-year ending the 30th of June last was 2,920,602, of which 2,605,141 were third class, as against 2,890,657 in the corresponding half of 1871, or an increase of 6.09 per cent. in the number carried and in the receipts of 8.69 per cent. The tonnage in goods and minerals was for the half-year 650,483 tons, against 580,378 tons in the corresponding half-year. The increase in weight carried was chiefly in local goods and in amount in traffic with the Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi Railway. There had been some increase of traffic with the Oude and Rohilkund Railway Company in materials carried from Howrah to Lucknow for that company; and a fair development of what might be regarded as the normal traffic of the line was shown in that interchanged with the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company, comprising large increases in pulse, grain, and cotton. The net earnings for the half-year, £824,866, after providing for the guaranteed interest, showed a surplus to the extent of £152,159. The surplus agreed to by the Secretary of State for division between the Government and the company was £150,695. The company's moiety, £75,347, plus the amount carried over on the last division of profits, with profit on exchange, would enable the board, after providing for Sir M. Stephenson's annuity, £2,500, to recommend the payment of a dividend, in addition to the guaranteed interest, of 6s. per cent., being the highest yet made, leaving a small balance over. The permanent way and works of the Jubbulpore line had been maintained in efficient order during the half-year at a cost of 8.67d. per train mile, against 10.36d. in the corresponding half-year. Deducting from the gross receipts the exceptional credit of £27,150 arising from an adjustment of accounts between the Jubbulpore line and the main line, it would be seen that there had been an increase of £18,434 in the receipts proper of the half-year on the Jubbulpore line.

Spirit of the Home Journals.

RUSSIA AND KHIVA.

The Times holds that it must be looked upon as a certainty of the future that the two Empires of Britain and Russia shall approach each other, even though in the end they should be contiguous. The countries now lying between them may not be actually subjugated by either nation and actually administered by its officials; but they will be under the influence and protection of one or the other, and belong either to the British or the Russian system. We have no doubt that, if Great Britain is to hold India, the region known as Afghanistan must form part of the British system. It is needless here to recall historical events or to enter into geographical details; anyone who desires to know what position Afghanistan has held in the judgment of Indian statesmen may refer to the narrative of the great war of thirty years since. Whatever may be thought of the policy of that war, the despatches and debates of the period make it plain that the conquest or defection of Afghanistan was looked upon as the most serious calamity which could befall our Indian Empire. Nothing has happened since to change this opinion; indeed, we are now, by the conquest of the Punjab, brought into immediate contact with the country, and any influences which affect it must be of still greater importance to ourselves. On the other hand, we are now more than ever able to exercise a guidance and control towards the North-West, and may, by judicious policy, place a vast and impregnable barrier between the region which is to be penetrated by Russian influence and our own immediate possessions. We are not obliged to believe all that comes to us as Central Asian news, but there is nothing improbable in the statement that the Khivans are taking the offensive and attacking the Russian forts. It was some time since declared that a resolution had been taken at St. Petersburg to make another expedition, with larger forces and better appliances than the former, and the Khivans, who are among the boldest and most obstinate of Tartar tribes, may have thought it better not to wait till all was ready. There can be no doubt of the final issue of the contest, but Khiva, protected by the vast desert in which it lies as an oasis, may give the Russians much trouble in the future, as in the past. As long back as the early years of the last century Peter the Great conceived the idea of conquering it, and undertook a campaign which entirely failed. For generations the Khivans have been accustomed to plunder the Russian caravans and carry off the travellers as prisoners, and mutual animosity has led to more than one important campaign in our own time. In 1839, a little before our army met its memorable reverses in Afghanistan, the Russians, under General Perowsky, made an equally disastrous expedition against Khiva; 20,000 men and 10,000 camels in vain endeavoured to cross the Khirghiz Steppe, and returned after suffering immense losses. It was not until fourteen years later, at the time of the Crimean war, that the same General Perowsky was able to make a more successful expedition, and to force the Khivans to acknowledge an allegiance which they seem since to have completely ignored. The occupation of the Sea of Aral by the Russians, and their progress on the banks of the Sir, have changed the conditions of the struggle, but still the subjugation of Khiva, with its resolute and fanatical population, may be a long and difficult work.

PRINCIPAL—MR. ROBERT CRASKE.

PROSPECTUS.

Mr. CRASKE desires to receive Boys at an early age—as soon as they can read well—in order that he may have charge of their Education from the very commencement of their studies.

Great care is taken that the elementary subjects are first thoroughly mastered, and that each Boy writes a good legible hand.

The next two or three years are devoted to Classical* and Mathematical work; and Mr. CRASKE is confident that the best of his Boys will be found able, at the age of Thirteen, to compete successfully for the various Scholarships now open to competition at Eton, Harrow, Winchester, and other great Public Schools.

The Classical and English Department is under the direction of Austin R. Whitway, Esq., Graduate in Classical Honours of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Mr. CRASKE himself takes charge of Arithmetic, Euclid, Algebra, and the higher Mathematics. Each Boy, in these subjects, is under his own personal instruction.

The French and German Languages are taught by competent Masters.

TERMS:

For each Boarder	60 Guineas.
Those who remain after Thirteen Years of Age	80 Guineas.
Day Boys and Weekly Boarders by Special Agreement.

These Terms include Drawing and Drilling. The charge for Laundering is also included. The only extra subject is German, the charge for which is Two Guineas per Quarter.

Mr. CRASKE considers it an essential part of a Boy's Education that he should be taught to Swim. He has, therefore, constructed a Bath twenty-five feet in length, with warming apparatus, to carry out this object effectually.

There are three Vacations in the year—a fortnight at Easter, seven weeks at Midsummer, and five weeks at Christmas.
